Compare Good Queen Mary
Men's Tragic Destiny

—By Arthur Brisbane—

The "Century of Progress" Exposition is opened for the second year with a success big enough to please even Chicago. Anything must be big to satisfy Chicago.

Already it is apparent that this year's greater and better exposition will eclipse the first year, in attendance and in every other way.

The day before the opening, Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., president of General Motors Company, gave a dinner for important men, at which were discussed, ably, matters of greatest importance to every human being in this country. You will read more about that in this column hereafter.

Henry Ford was there to inspect his new exposition buildings. Before he realized it, half a dozen young Americans, 12 to 15 years old, had recognized him, appointed him their guide, without pay, and kept him busy for an hour explaining everything to them, while his distracted secretaries tried to remind him of important business appointments.

Mr. Ford told them, "These boys are more important. There is nothing serious the matter with a country when the young people are interested in new ideas."

Do not fail to visit Chicago's wonderful "Century of Progress Exposition" this summer. See what has been done in the past century of progress. See your country, coming and going, and ask yourself what the next century of progress will accomplish, when this little depression stomach-ache shall have been forgotten.

Really big world-news is of an alliance, of arms, between Soviet Russia and "capitalistic" France. The same old story as in the days of czars; France and Russia united, with Germany, feared by both, between them. This time, France has an alliance with a real POWER, and France will probably, this time, as formerly, express her joy with friendly loans.

Germany worries, but should not be surprised. Chancellor Hitler's denunciations of communism invited that Russian-French alliance.

Queen Mary of England celebrated her 67th birthday, on Saturday, all her family around her, all Britain, and the rest of that "far-flung" enterprise wishing her many more happy years. Queen Mary has always set a good example, most important in every mother, queen or washwoman.

Contrast Queen Mary with some other queens, with foolish, unfortunate Marie Antoinette, who asked "why don't they eat cake?" when told the people had no bread.

AIRMEN DUMP FUEL AT VOYAGE END

BLONDE GIRL IDENTIFIED AS BANDIT

A 22-year-old mother of three children and a man accused of being her accomplice were arraigned in Charlestown Municipal Court today, charged with a $3.75 holdup last February, and were held for the grand jury in $2000 each despite the woman's plea to be allowed to care for her children.

They were Mrs. Catherine Daly of Main street, Charlestown, a blonde with bobbed hair, and Theodore Smith, 29, of another address in the same street. They were accused of taking $3 from Israel Furman and 75 cents from Max Paul, in their tailor shop at 323 Main street, Charlestown.

"These men are mistaken," Mrs. Daly insisted when both Paul and Furman identified her as the bandit who held her hand under her coat as though she held a gun while Smith took their money.

"It's all a case of mistaken identity," said Smith in denying the charges.

"I'd like to give her a break," said Furman in joining with the police in a plea that the mother be allowed to care for the youngest of her children, eight months old.

Judge Stover, however, ruled that the case was beyond his jurisdiction and that there was nothing for him to do but hold both of them for the grand jury. He set bail at $1000 on each of the two counts preferred against them.

Mrs. Daly has a husband, John, serving time in Charles street jail for breaking and entering, police said. She told Lieutenant Louis DiSessa she thought he had been "framed."

ROOSEVELT IN SUGAR PLEA

By International News Service

Washington, May 28—President Roosevelt in a special message today asked Congress to reconsider its action imposing a three-cent per pound tax on cocoanut oil from the Philippine Islands.

Mr. Rosevelt termed the tax a withdrawal of an offer made by the Congress in the Philippine independence act, passed earlier in the session. He pointed out that in this act the islands were allowed to send 448,000,000 pounds of cocoanut oil yearly into this country duty free. The later action in imposing the processing tax Mr. Roosevelt referred to as directly contrary to the oil provision of the independence act.

The President asked that the Congress reconsider the tax and study the matter further between now and next January, in order that when legislation dealing with cocoanut oil from the Philippines is finally enacted it may more closely following the spirit and intent of the independence act.

PAY UP! IS BLUNT NOTE TO LONDON

By HARRY K. REYNOLDS
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

London, May 28—President Roosevelt has flatly notified debtor nations of the United States that they must pay instalments due on June 15 or accept the stigma of defaulting on honorable obligations.

This, International News Service learned today, is the substance of the report the British Cabinet will hear Wednesday of the result of the conversations between Sir Ronald Lindsay, British ambassador to Washington, and President Roosevelt.

All indications here are that despite a terrific European official and press barrage, Roosevelt has not budged a single inch and has accepted the Johnson bill, passed by Congress, barring the flotation of loans in the United States by defaulting nations, for exactly what it is worth.

NOTE REPORTED BRUSQUE

Though the President still hopes that some practical way can be found out of the debt deadlock it is learned that the "dunning note" sent Great Britain and other creditor powers last Friday was very brusque.

Billing them as if they were persons who had failed to pay their grocery bills, the United States Government announced that foreign debt payments due June 15, 1933; Dec. 15, 1933, and June 15, 1934, fall due on June 15, 1934.

"Payment," the note said, "can be made either at the Treasury in Washington or the Federal Reserve Bank in New York."

ADVISED ON "SENTIMENT"

The efforts of Sir Ronald Lindsay, it is learned, have been confined chiefly to clarifying the American government's position. He has long realised and has so advised the British government that sentiment in the United States for revision or cancellation of the foreign debt settlements is practically nil.

If the cabinet decides to default completely on the June 15 instalment or decides upon only a small token payment, the British argument, as International News Service has pointed out before, will be that the payment of the entire sum due would disturb world exchanges.

McLarnin Has 5 Lb. Advantage

By Associated Press

New York, May 28—Jimmy McLarnin, in defending his world welterweight boxing title against the challenge of Barney Ross of Chicago, lightweight king, will have less than a five-pound pull in the weights.

McLarnin stepped on the official scales at noon today and tipped the beam at exactly 142 pounds, five pounds under the welter limit and three pounds less than the mark he agreed to make for Ross, who weighed 137¾ pounds.

Millen Bribery Bared in Jail Break Plot

By JAMES J. SMITH
Boston Evening American Staff Correspondent

Dedham, May 28—Bribery in Dedham jail was charged today by District Attorney Edmund R. Dewing at the same time that he revealed failure of plans to trap Irving Millen into disclosing who was attempting to aid him from the outside.

The bribe acceptor is known, he said. He has been the recipient of weekly sums to furnish outsiders with information that was ordered by authorities to be kept strictly confidential, Dewing added.

The district attorney said there was absolutely no suspicion cast upon any of the state trooper detail on duty in shifts since Irving, his brother Murton and Abe Faber were arrested for murder in the Needham Trust holdup.

Dewing was plainly incensed over the weekend happenings in which a trusty was detected with a note in which Irving asked that he secure a gun.

In the investigation that followed, it was revealed today, the trusty was compelled to write a reply and pass it to Irving.

"How am I going to get a gun?" it queried.

$1000 BAIL IN ANDOVER DEATH

Lawrence, May 28—Thomas R. Burrell, 3rd, of Fall River, driver of the car on which James A. Kingsbury, Jr., of Yonkers, N. Y., was riding when he was killed after a fraternity initiation stunt Saturday morning, was held in $1000 bond in court here today.

Burrell was accused of manslaughter and of driving so as to endanger. He pleaded not guilty to both charges and the case was continued until June 12. He was a member of last year's class at Phillips-Andover Academy.

Kingsbury, son of the head of the Milbank Foundation, New York, and former professor of surgery in the Harvard Medical School, was a senior in the school. He was riding on the running board of the car with a classmate, Howard Pratt Johnson, 17, of Upper Montclair, N. J., when it skidded and sideswiped a tree. Johnson also was seriously injured.

FRENCH AIRMEN ARE SAFE IN NEW YORK

BULLETIN

By Associated Press

Brooklyn, N. Y., May 28—The French fliers, Rossi and Codes, arrived over Floyd Bennett Field at 1:32 p. m., Eastern Standard Time, today and dumped gasoline in preparation for a landing, which was made a few minutes later.

They landed at 2:38 p. m. Eastern daylight time, their flight consuming thirty-eight and a half hours.

Forced to abandon their plan to make San Diego, Cal., in one hop, the French transatlantic fliers were somewhere along the New England coast this afternoon on their way to New York for a landing.

Reports of motor trouble were radioed from the plane on the way down from Nova Scotia, and finally a message making the New York landing definite was picked up by Admiral David Sellers, commanding the Atlantic fleet. It said:

"Please advise Floyd Bennett Field will land 'Joseph LeBrix.' Also please cable French air ministry."

At that time the exact whereabouts of the plane was unknown, but earlier it had been reported sighted in Maine at Eastport, Rockland, Bar Harbor and Thomaston.

There was also a report that the big, silver-hued monoplane "Joseph LeBrix" had been sighted at York Harbor, Me., but this was not positive.

In one message received by the Mackay Radio Corporation station at Rockland, Me., and signed by Lieutenant Maurice Rossi, companion flier with Lieutenant Paul Codos, it was indicated that the motor trouble they had reported earlier might force them to land at Boston Airport.

This message was received shortly after 11 a. m., Boston time, and a short time later, at 11:15 a. m., the plane was sighted over Thomaston, Me., and identified by Leon Tanguay, pilot of the Curtis Airways in that town.

The plane over Thomaston was flying in a southwesterly direction, or directly toward Boston.

Tanguay said he was certain it was the monoplane of the Frenchmen and that the ship was making fast time. He could detect no sound, he said, to indicate that the motor was not working perfectly.

LANDING MESSAGE

"Will proceed to New York and land unless certain difficulties are adjusted."

According to the Associated Press a message from Codos and Rossi addressed to President Roosevelt, was received by the radio branch of the Canadian Marine Department, Ottawa, at 9:25 a. m. (E.S.T.). As translated, it read:

"Now flying over American land. We address a salute to Franklin D. Roosevelt President of the United States, Washington. We have reached America at 5 o'clock (G.M.T.) at Newfoundland. Flying over Nova Scotia. Advise Floyd Bennett Field,

TECH MEN AND GIRL AID FABER IN HIS BATTLE FOR LIFE

ABE'S SHYNESS IS LINKED UP TO CLAIM OF INSANITY

Judge Brown Explains Again to Jury Why He Wrote to Mind Experts to Test 2 Millen Brothers

By WIN BROOKS

Boston Evening American Staff Correspondent

Dedham Courthouse, May 28—"We will throw the dice, gentlemen. You will read the numbers. It will be for you to say whether they read life or death for Abe Faber."

In the courtroom at Faber's trial for murder during bank robbery, William R. Scharton concluded his opening argument on the insanity offense with those words this morning.

His hand swept along the rail of the jury box and, figuratively, dice rattled across the courtroom floor and the first of Faber's witnesses took the stand — Prof. Myron S. Huckle of Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Three members of the Tech faculty and four neighbors of Faber, including Lois Larbey, "the prettiest girl of the trial," testified during the morning as the defense got away to a fast start. All told of Abe's shy manner as a youth—indications, it is claimed, of the "split personality" that later developed.

Opening of the seventh week of trial of the Tech graduate and the Millen brothers, Murton and Irving, was featured by a brief address to the jury by Judge Nelson P. Brown in which the trial justice explained the only connection of the court with the testimony of defense psychiatrists it invited to examine the Millens was "solely in securing an honest report."

ALL UP TO JURY

"It does not guarantee its quality, or its weight or creditability, which are entirely up to you to determine, as you will, under instructions later to be given you at the conclusion of this case," said Judge Brown.

In his address, Judge Brown revealed that in the letter he sent to Dr. Max Bennett, Boston psychiatrist, who declared Murton Millen a madman, he had written:

"I have no interest in the case other than to see that they have a fair trial and in view of their special plea of insanity it is necessary that their legal responsibility for the crimes that they are alleged to have committed be determined.

"For this we must depend upon the medical profession to large extent. If it declined to co-operate, justice may fail and the hostile professional attitude which makes a doctor's examination and an honest report of findings impossible, seems to be reprehensible."

Outlining his defense, Scharton declared that Faber will positively take the witness stand—

"To tell you that he could not resist—that Murton asked him and he went. I intend to put Abe himself on the stand and I welcome the skilled examination of the district attorney."

MURTON IS BLAMED

Once again Murton Millen was held responsible for Faber's participation in the crime, as he has been held responsible for his younger brothers.

Three Massachusetts Institute of Technology professors who had Faber as a student during his college days, testified to his shyness and reserve.

Professor Huckle testified he noticed that Faber had a sense of inferiority at the same time that he evinced tremendous self-confidence. He smiled at Faber in the cage as he passed by on his way out.

Professor Samuel Ober said he had Abe as a student for one year and that he was "quite shy."

When Faber worked during one summer as a draftsman on a Connecticut project for Professor Joseph S. Newell, the aeronautics professor testified, he went off by himself after the completion of the day's work, refusing to mingle with the other student draftsmen or to attend the movies and other social functions with them.

Faculty members of M. I. T. discussed Faber's implication in the crimes.

He said: "We were surprised."

Thomas J. Larbet of Roxbury, whose story of Abe's eccentricities was a highlight of the "insanity evidence" during the week the jury was excluded, returned to tell his story in briefer form.

Lois Larbet, blonde and twenty, wearing a tricky yellow knit beret over a mass of curls, followed her father to the stand. She told of Abe's quiet reserve at all times, of his seeming unhappy manner and of the attempt of both her sister and herself to cheer him up.

As she answered defense counsel's questions, she kept staring at the prisoner's cage. Faber's head was bowed low, resting on his arm which rested on his knee.

"Abe was very thrifty and never went out with girls," she said.

The blonde girl told of seeing Abe and Murt Millen together beginning 1931.

She said Mrs. Faber told her that Abe had hidden some money under a rug and that she had found it.

Mrs. Mary Welch and her husband, Patrick, who lived with the Fabers in a house in Blue Hill avenue, Roxbury, for 11 years, corroborated neighborly testimony that Faber was a shy, reserved type who "never had much to say."

"I never saw Abe play at sports or games or with other children in the street," Mrs. Welch testified.

"In later years the only girl I ever saw him with was Rose .Knellar," she concluded.

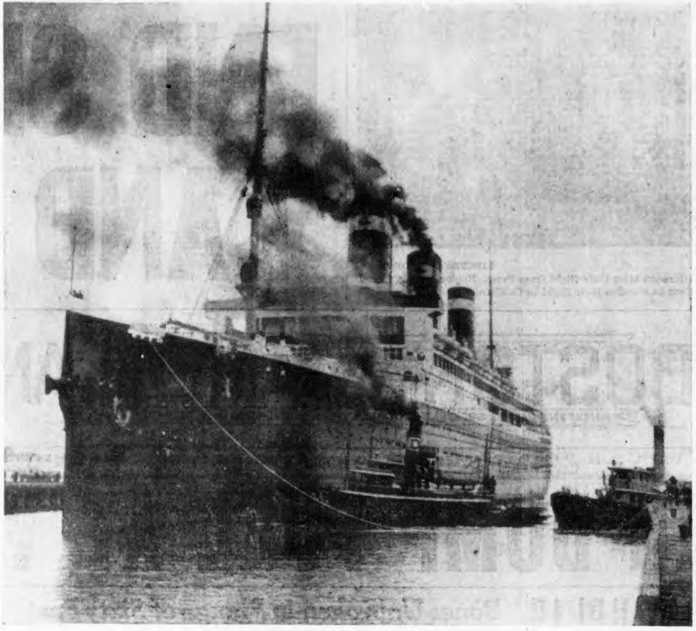
Queen of Seas Here for Beauty Treatment



The giant liner, Leviathan, is in South Boston drydock today for a short visit to be reconditioned. Immediately upon arrival, the dock was drained and hundreds of workers swarmed over the vessel to scrape the surface preliminary to repainting. The Leviathan is due in New York June 9 to start the first of a series of Atlantic crossings. The vessel was saved from retirement only a few days ago by the International Merchant Marine. (Picture by Boston Evening American Staff Photographer)

LEVIATHAN HERE FOR REPAIRS

Like ducklings around a parent, 14 tugs guided the giant liner Leviathan into the navy drydock at South Boston today.

From now until June 7 nearly 1000 workmen will recondition the big vessel, that only three weeks ago was saved from the junk pile by the International Mercantile Marine Company.

The liner was piloted from New York by Pilot Oscar Y. Woodbury and Captain A. B. Randall, her commander.

The Leviathan is due at New York June 9 for the first of seven sailings. No visitors will be allowed, the company announced. During the liner's stay here, Capt. Giles C. Stedman, of Quincy, will act as staff captain.

Mayor Asks Legislation to Adjust Boston Finances

Mayor Mansfield, after painting a sorry picture of Boston's financial condition next year if assessments are slashed and salary reductions restored, today made the startling suggestion to the House rules committee that boh branches of he legislature be brought into an extraordinary executive session to allow him to "plead the cause of Boston."

In the absence of a decision on the novel request, the mayor indicated that hewill call a caucus of the Boston members of the legislature in an effort to line up support for his bill for authority to continue the pay cuts through 1935.

MAYOR'S BILL UP

These developments came while the mayor was arguing for the admission of his bill at this session of the legislature.

Speakers favoring the bill were City Auditor and Budget Commissioner Charles J. Fox and Isidore H. Fox, the city's legislative agent. No opposition was registered and it was intimated that the committee will reserve decision on the suggestion.

Next year, the mayor said, Boston will be confronted with a tax rate of $41 or $42 a thousand, if the assessors cut $200,000,000 from the assessed valuations and salary cuts are given back.

With such a tax rate, he feared that the taxpayers would revolt and bankers refuse to lend money to the city, which might bring about payless pay days, wholesale slashing of the payroll and the possible issuance of script.

"WOULD SAVE BOSTON"

Such a plight, the mayor asserted, might bring about the appointment of a finance commission, and the establishment of economies that "would make what I am trying to do look like child's play."

"I am seeking power to save Boston," he said. "I am only trying to save the employe's jobs. Employes arguing for restoration of salaries would be the very first to suffer if this legislation is not approved. Talk of financial difficulties confronting the city for the coming year is not idle."

CHILD ALIVE IN 60-FOOT FALL

Josephine Martinelli, 10, of Battery street, North End, is in a critical condition at Haymarket Relief station today with injuries suffered when she crashed through a skylight while playing on the roof of a building in Salutation street and plunged 60 feet to the basement.

Doctors stated that it was a miracle that the child suffered no broken bones in the plunge. It is believed she struck an opened window in the third floor of the airshaft, which served to break her fall, although causing the laceration which ruptured the abdominal wall.

Playmates of the girl told police that they had been playing on the roof for some time before the accident occurred. The Martinelli girl climbed on the staircase skylight and jumped to the roof level.

MILLEN BRIBERY PLOT BARED

secure from Irving any information that would lead to arrest of persons outside the jail who were planning to aid the escape.

The jail leak went to work, however, and the trap could not be sprung.

Judge Brown, presiding at the trial of the three Roxbury men, took official cognizance of the "doings" at the jail today. He sat in a 20-minute conference with Sheriff Samuel H. Capen, Lieutenant Thomas H. Mitchell of the state police, and Attorney George Stanley Harvey, counsel for the Millens.

In another part of the courthouse—and at the same time—State Trooper Michael Shea seized the father of the Millen youths and searched him from head to foot.

Dewing then announced that he had definite information on bribery at the jail.

"This thing has gone too far and you can be sure I'll find out about it today," he said.

"This is a very serious matter and I'm not going to stand for any information getting out that should be held strictly confidential.

"I have received reports that money has been passed over at the jail and I'm going to get at the bottom of it."

He added that the revealing reply from Irving was to have been written today but that the leak ruined all plans the prosecutor had to find out the thought of Irving behind his repeated ideas on escape.

NEED OF REVERENCE IS URGED BY EX-JUSTICE HOLMES

Aged Supreme Court Jurist, Who Is Now Resting at North Shore Home, Unstirred by New Deal

Copyright, 1934, Boston Evening American.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES

Since his younger days, when he was wounded twice while soldiering with the Union army in the Civil War, Judge Holmes has seen the cards of government and the cards of business and the cards of international diplomacy, all reshuffled more than once, and more than once all dealt anew.

So his immediate concerns, he said today, are the poignancy of the scent of New England lilacs, the beat of surf off the Beverly headlands, and the outcome of the murder-mystery novel which is his "serious reading" of the week-end.

But, if the world at large is still interested in Judge Holmes' opinions, and he modestly doesn't believe it is, those opinions, he points out, "remain on record."

As for instance:

"I believe the wholesale social regeneration which so many now seem to expect, if it can be helped by conscious, co-ordinated human effort, cannot be affected appreciably by tinkering with the institution of property, but only by taking in hand life and trying to build a new race.

"That would be my starting point for an ideal for the law. The notion, that, with socialized property, we should have women free and piano for everybody seems to me an empty humbug."

Admittedly, not a new opinion, that. But a typical Oliver Wendell Holmes opinion. And Judge Holmes, he made it clear today, is still sticking to his guns.

MEN UNEQUAL, HE SAYS

Then, there's the question of the much-talked-of world-wide swing from democracy to dictatorships.

No need to guess the reaction of Judge Holmes to that. He doesn't believe, he still says, that all men are, or can be, equal:

"I think we will all agree that the passion for equality has passed far beyond the political or even the social sphere. We are not only unwilling to admit that any class or society is better than that in which we move, but our customary attitude toward anyone in authority of any kind is that he is merely the lucky recipient of honor or salary above the average, which an average man might as well receive as he.

MODESTY A VIRTUE

"But when the effervescence of democratic negation extends its workings beyond the abolition of external distinctions of rank to spiritual things . . . when the passion for equality is not content with founding social intercourse upon universal human sympathy and a community of interests in which all may share, but attacks the line of nature which established orders and degrees among the souls of men . . . then they are not only wrong but ignobly wrong.

"Modesty and reverence are no less virtues of free men, than the democratic feeling which will submit neither to arrogance nor to servility."

BAY STATER AT HEART

That's the social philosophy of retired U. S. Supreme Court Justice Holmes, son of the ultra-Boston Oliver Wendell Holmes, who wrote the "Autocrat of the Breakfast Table" and whose lines, beginning with "Ay, tear her tattered ensign down," are credited today with having originally saved "Old Ironsides" from destruction and national forgetfulness.

Judge Holmes, like his illustrious father, is a Massachusetts man at heart.

That's one reason why this Summer, weeks earlier than usual, he has quit his Washington residence for the quiet of his cottage by the Beverly shore.

His health, he said today, is "improved" by the rest he has had since his retirement from the Supreme Court bench two years ago, after almost three full decades of service.

He still experiences some difficulty in walking, but he takes a daily automobile outing, touring North Shore beauty spots familiar to him since his earliest boyhood.

"TOMORROWS ARE FEW"

The lilacs are out now at Beverly Farms. And the ocean is changing from winter green to summer blue.

Those are things, according to Judge Holmes, which mean much to him today, "as they must to any man whose tomorrows are few."

So far as national politics are concerned, Judge Holmes "isn't worrying."

He has seen other depressions, other recoveries, other governmental experiments.

He believes, he said, incautious administration of constitutional authority so that "play may be allowed for the joints of the machine," for the reason that "it must be remembered that legislatures are ultimate guardians of the liberty and the welfare of the people in quite as great a degree as the courts."

Again, an opinion that isn't new.

LITTLE THAT IS NEW

But Judge Holmes, at 93, thinks there isn't so much in the world that is new. He has given up reading the daily papers. He goes to bed at 6 p. m.—and has no nightmares about President Roosevelt.

It's a pleasant world, these mornings, which Judge Holmes wakes up to. With the scent of lilacs in the air and the beat of the ocean in the distance.

He isn't worried about that world, he said today. He doesn't believe it is greatly menaced.

U. S. Opens Drive to Free Strike From Red Menace

By International News Service.

Toledo, O., May 28—While Federal labor mediators worked with renewed hope of bringing about "a complete settlement" of the strike problem, a vigorous campaign was reported to have been launched here today to stamp out communists and professional labor agitators" blamed for inflaming the riots that have bloodied the labor quarrel between workers and officials of the Electric Auto-Lite Co. plant.

Twenty Department of Justice men, it was reported, have been taken off the trail of John Dillinger, America's Public Enemy No. 1, and brought here to ferret out labor agitators responsible for inflaming the strikers in the city with the spirit of destructive riot.

WHITE SEES REMOVAL

The reported arrival of the agents, followed assertions of officials of the Ohio National Guard, on duty at the strike scene, that outside labor agitators have been responsible for the riot conditions that already have resulted in two killings and more than 150 persons injured.

At Columbus, Gov. George A. White in a formal statement said:

"I believe that conditions in Toledo are rapidly reaching a point where it will be possible to withdraw the National Guard at an early date, and I shall take such action as soon as I am assured by local authorities they can maintain law and order."

The National Guard officers, in blaming "outside unlawful elements" for the strike outbreaks, expressed the attitude that bona fide striking employes at the Auto-Lite plant are "conducting themselves in an orderly manner."

New hope for a peace pact soon in the strike controversy at the Auto-Lite plant was seen in the statement issued by the federal labor mediators, headed by Charles F. Taft of Cincinnati, that there is a "possibility of complete settlement."

STATEMENT IS HOPEFUL

Taft indicated in his statement that the negotiations are proceeding along the line toward a permanent peace pact plan rather than a mere temporary arbitration for future settlement.

Laurinburg, N. C., May 28 (AP)—The last of the four units of Waverly Mills, Inc., to be affected by strikes was "temporarily closed" today following a riot last night in which eight men were wounded, one of them possibly fatally.

New Orleans, May 28 (AP)—A Negro was shot in the arm and a policeman suffered a fractured hand during an exchange of pistol fire, and fist fights between striking longshoremen and a group of officers in a riot last night by some 200 strikers at the riverfront longshoremen's strike.

The strikers tried to "take the wharf" after a meeting of 3000 strikers and sympathizers at Longshoremen's hall, the police reports said, but were repulsed after a pitched battle of short duration.

MRS. ROBINSON TELLS OF RACE AGAINST DEATH

Explorer Rallies After Reaching Hospital; Pain Subsides

By Universal Service

Balboa, C. Z., May 27—Although he had slept only a few hours since noon yesterday, William A. Robinson, stricken American explorer who was rushed here in two days from the Galapagos Islands on the U. S. S. destroyer Hale, was reported in good condition at Gorgos Hospital.

A bulletin stated that extreme pain and excitement had prevented him from sleeping. Steady improvement is expected.

THANKS TO NAVY

The bulletin declared that the appendectomy performed by naval doctors who flew to the explorer's aid was "exceptional" and undoubtedly had saved his life.

When the Hale docked, Mrs. Robinson, the explorer's young wife, with whom he was honeymooning aboard his 32-foot ketch, the Svaap, when he was stricken with acute appendicitis, was met by Admiral W. S. Crosley and United States Minister Antonio G. Gonzales. As the officials approached her, Mrs. Robinson stammered:

"We thank the navy from the bottom of our hearts. I know they saved my husband's life. I shall never forget them."

Later, when a rest had partially restored her strength Mrs. Robinson was able to tell the story of the explorer's fight against an agonizing death. She said:

"But for Captain Hage, of the fishing boat Santa Cruz, my husband would surely have perished. He stood a 24-hour vigil, radioing frantically for help, working the key of a rickety sputtering spark set hour after hour, never knowing whether the signals had been picked up or not. Finally an acknowledgement came, and with it hope.

HOPES RISE AND SINK

"Word came that the navy was on the way, and our spirits rose, although we were still doubtful that they could arrive in time.

"One evening, at dusk, we sighted navy planes—two of them—gliding into Tagus cove. We could hardly believe our eyes, we were so thankful they had appeared in time."

Mrs. Robinson told how her hopes rose, then sank again, as Navy Doctors Yarborough and Hutchinson, after examining her husband, decided they must wait for the destroyer before performing an operation. She continued:

"Two days later the Hale arrived, and with the greatest care, the doctors transferred my husband to the sick bay, where they operated on him at last. We steamed for Balboa."

SPELLING BEE IS BROADCAST

DRIVER TRIED AS GIRL IS BURIED

While Miss Mary Coughlin, 26, of 21 Montrose street, Roxbury, was being buried from St. Joseph's Church, Francis J. Jordan, 27, of Shafter street, Dorchester, was being arraigned in Roxbury court today on charges of manslaughter, leaving the scene of an accident and operating so as to endanger.

It was his car that killed Miss Coughlin, last Friday night, according to the police, and injured her companion, Elmer E. McMahon, 36, of Gray Circle street, Arlington, as they were returning from Louise Park, Roxbury, where they had paid their last respects to the body of Mrs. John Weltman, killed in an auto crash the day before.

McMahon is in a serious condition at City Hospital. After Jordan entered a plea of not guilty, Judge Albert Hayden continued his case until June 8. He is being held in $4000 bond.

Barbara Holmes gives her patrons a card of introduction from the bureau to the agency or person offering the rental.

Irish Star 'Kidnap Plot' Only Hoax

But Youth Is Arrested

Maureen O'Sullivan, so the story went, was to have been held for ransom. The report worried her parents in Ireland more than it did the star, who, catching an American idiom quickly, declared herself "able to paddle her own canoe" even in kidnapings. (Pictures from International News Photograph Service.)

Maureen O'Sullivan wasn't frightened very much when the kidnapers were after her. She was told by an absolute stranger at a Hollywood luncheon all about the plot and then police arrested the stranger, who confessed it was a hoax.

Slim Blue Line of '61 Joins in Memorial Services

Spring blooms today were washing over the New England waters after those of the land in memorial services indicated that they had not forgotten the dead heroes of the seas . . .

More of the flowers were planted afresh in a hundred cemeteries of New England for the soldier dead, after salutes had been fired over the graves, while soldiers of three wars stood at attention.

TAPS SOUNDS AT GRAVES

The brightest blue sky of the year marked the first memorial celebration of the week. "Taps" floated out in most of the burial places of New England. But in all the state, less than 100 veterans of the Civil War were able to march under the warm sun.

Only four of the Civil War soldiers appeared at the services under the auspices of the Kearsarge Naval Veterans at the Cathedral of the Holy Cross and under the sons of the Union Veterans at the Union Church in Clumbus ave.

At services at the Cathredal, Rev. George A. Smith, who was ordained Friday by Cardinal O'Connell, said mass at a service preceded by a parade. The Kearsarge Association, Spanish War veterans, the Navy Post of the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, the United States Fleet reserve and Sea Scouts were in the line of march.

Memorial services were held in South Boston in the South Baptist Church, where the Rev. Louis W. West preached the sermon before members of every veterans' organization in that community.

3000 HONOR HEROES

Lynn and Swampscott veterans yesterday attended serivces for the first time in a Jewish synagogue, at the Temple Beth El. A prayer for peace was recited by Rabbi Israel Harburg.

Memorial services were attended by more than 3000 when veterans of the Navy, Marines ,and Army, met to pay honor to the sailor and marine dead at the Red Rock reservation, in Lynn Shore drive.

STAR "KIDNAP" SUSPECT HELD

Hollywood, May 28 (INS)—Writing a swift finale to an alleged kidnaping plot directed against Maureen O'Sullivan, dark-eyed Irish film actress, detectives today arrested Colum McConaster, 24, and booked him on investigation of suspicion of extortion.

McConaster said he recently had arrived from St. Louis.

He admitted, detectives said, he had informed Miss O'Sullivan she was to be kidnaped, in the hope that she would reward him for the information.

The actress yesterday was approached and told:

"I happen to know that you are going to be kidnaped. Be careful."

She promptly reported the incident to police.

20-Million Heiress Was Dazzled by Regal Crown

New York, May 28—Regal gems crowned the romance of Barbara Hutton of the 5-and-10 royal family, and "Prince" Alexis Mdivani—pronounced "Deoney" — when all the socially-elect of Paris, London and other points jammed the Russian cathedral in Paris for their wedding in June, 1933.

The gems adorned two golden crowns, big and heavy enough for an emperor and empress, which were utilized as props for the ceremony—an old Russian custom.

And the crowns, according to friends, symbolized the apex of Barbara's fondest ambitions.

Before that spectacular wedding the honey-haired, starry-eyed daughter of fortune had everything in the world except a crown—vast wealth (she was considered the "second richest girl in the world"); yachts, cars, estates, beauty, flattery, popularity, freedom to travel as she wished, and social standing. She was the most sought-after debbie of the 1930 vintage.

PICKED POOR "PRINCE"

But it took a poor "Prince" to lead her to the altar. One among many sired by the Mdivanis, rulers of Georgia, a tiny corner of Russia, a house which had been wiped out by the Russian revolution, but whose sons continued to use their titles.

Alexis had a certain charm. He wasn't brought up for business and, strangely enough, the little girl whose fortune came from a business built on the importance of a 5-cent sale, liked this about him.

The meeting occurred in Paris. Barbara had said farewell in New York to a huge party of friends and suitors before the boat sailed for Europe—for Cannes and Biarritz as well as Paris, where the Huttons have a huge chateau.

At the time of the meeting Alexis was the husband of the blue blooded and very attractive Louise Astor Van Alen, daughter of the William Laurens Van Alens.

That marriage was tottering and when "Prince" Alexis first saw the lovely Barbara of the 20 million dollar fortune, the end of the Van Alen-Midvani union could be glimpsed.

Long before Louise filed divorce papers in Paris Barbara and Alexis had been seen together at fashionable places time and again.

FOLLOWED HER TO ORIENT

At that time, Barbara was asked about her engagement to Alexis. She denied it. So did he. Then Barbara started on a world tour.

Alexis followed in no time. He caught up with her in the Orient—they were together in Bankok, Bali and Shanghai. It was said he obtained her promise to be married to him in the soft moonlight and the scented breezes of the island of Bali.

But there was still Papa Franklyn Hutton to be considered. Would be consent to the marriage? Barbara and Alexis presented the plan to him in Paris. And won.

Before the civil ceremony was performed Alexis signed away his rights to Barbara's $20,000,000, but agreed to take $250,000 a year as dowry, that amount to cease if and when the marriage ended.

POISON DEATHS CASE STILL ON

Guy S. Croft, superintendent of the Boston State Hospital, Mattapan, who was charged with the responsibility for the death of two patients Saturday when they were given an overdose of a powerful sedative by mistake, was arraigned in West Roxbury court today.

He was charged with manslaughter on two counts, but the case was continued until Thursday before he could plead to the accusations. He is being held in $2500 bail.

PRINCESS BARS DIVORCE TALK ON PHONE

Hutton Is Speeding to Daughter as Ponies Blight Romance

New York, Maq 28—America's $40,000,000 princess may never reach the first milepost along the royal road to romance.

Still in the first year of a gilded honeymoon with Prince Alexis Mdivani, Barbara Hutton, heiress to the Woolworth five-and-ten fortune, was locked in her suite at a London hotel today, tearfully awaiting the arrival of her father, and defiantly refusing to discuss the reports of an impending divorce.

To a point-blank inquiry, Princess Barbara flared into the transatlantic telephone:

"Won't you let me handle my own affairs for once in my life?"

"But Miss Hutton"—to America she still is Miss Hutton—"your countrymen have a natural interest in your happiness——"

PRINCESS HANGS UP

There was a sharp click! over the Atlantic ether waves, and then the voice of the English telephone operator, speaking in cold accents:

"Sorry, America, but the Princess is no longer there!"

Neither was the Princeling Mdivani, who has been occupying a connecting bedroom in the suite at the Hotel Claridge, but whose preference for the society of his polo ponies anid his Parisian cronies is alleged to have brought about a definite break with Barbara.

In answer to imploring letters from his daughter, father Franklyn L. Hutton was hurrying to her side as fast as the liner Bremen can carry him.

TEARS IN REPLY

"What is the real purpose of your fathers' trip to London?" the Princess Barbara was asked today.

Tears and temperament were mingled in her reply.

"Oh, can't my father come to see me if he wants to?"

"Is he coming to help you arrange the divorce?"

There was a moment of defiant silence, then:

"Won't you let me handle my own affairs for once in my life?"

A series of tearful letters from Barbara to her father had complained that her dashing Georgian prince has been lavishing more attention on the ponies she gave him as a wedding present than on his lovely young wife, it was learned.

FATHER WAS OPPOSED

Hutton was opposed to the match at first, but later was won over by the couple. He was present at the ceremony which joined them on June 20 last in Paris.

Mdivanis Together in Hotel Claridge at London

London, May 28—(US)—Prince and Princess Alexis Mdivani are occupying the same suite at the Hotel Claridge here.

They could not be reached for comment on the New York report of a rift.

PRINCE MDIVANI

Princess Barbara Hutton Mdivani, heiress to some 20 million dollars of the Woolworth fortune, has met a new hurdle in her short marital life with Prince Mdivani. He spends his time with polo ponies she gave him instead of with her, she complains.

FRANCE THREATENS TO RUIN PARLEY ON ARMS

Paris Fears Exodus From Saar if League Mandate Is Dropped; Ask Guarantee

By KARL H. VON WIEGAND

GENEVA, May 28—What may develop into the most momentous week Geneva has known since Japan and Germany withdrew from the League of Nations—a week fateful in its influence on European peace or war—will begin today with the meeting of the disarmament conference bureau.

This meeting will be followed tomorow by a meeting of the general disarmament commission and on Wednesday by the League of Nations council.

France, whose ideas of her own security have contributed so much to the failure of the disarmament conference efforts, will again, it is learned from an authoritative source, adopt dilatory tactics here this week.

SEEK HITLER COLLAPSE

Convinced that Chancellor Hitler's regime is cracking under increasing pressure of the economic crisis and growing popular disillusion and discontent in Germany, the French will endeavor to gain time to watch that process.

They believe that attrition from disappointment and failure to achieve any notable economic, financial or foreign political successes will cause Hitlerism to collapse by the end of the year. The French profess to be firmly convinced of that.

To accelerate this progress, the French apparently plan to prevent Hitler from reaping any success in the Saar region by refusing to agree to a date for the Saar plebiscite unless Germany furnishes far-reaching guarantees for Jews, Socialists, Catholics and other minorities, should the majority vote that the Saar again become part of Germany.

FEAR SAAR REPRISALS

The French argue that fear of reprisals would drive more than 15,000 refugees from the Saar across the border into France, once it is no longer under control of the League.

Foreign Minister Louis Barthou has flatly announced that no date will be set for the plebiscite until the guarantees are given. As the date can be set only by unanimous vote of the League council, France is in position to block it.

Should such an attitude have a provocative effect in the Saar, the League could under treaty provisions at the request of France send troops to maintain order.

It is believed here that Barthou will move to wind up the present disarmament effort and disarmament commission by asking that the mandate for disarmament be returned to the League council with the request that the council name a commitee of big powers to study the situation and draw up a new mandate for disarmament.

HENDERSON OPPOSED

Arthur Henderson, president of the conference, and representatives of a number of smaller nations, are strongly opposed to Barthou's plan and may stage a revolt. The impression in Geneva is that Britain and Italy have already more or less agreed with France.

Scarcely second in importance to the disarmament meetings, during which a determined effort will be made to revive the league, there is behind the scenes the spectre of a new Russo-French defensive security pact as part of the encirclement of Hitler. By the irony of fate, it would bring Russia into the league in place of Germany. In effort and purpose it would be a Russo-French alliance against Germany.

Soviet Foreign Commissar Litvinoff, it is said, is not enthusiastic about entering the league, but since France makes this a condition to conclusion of the pact, and Russia, in fear of war sooner or later with Japan, wants a free hand in the Far East and to be safe-guarded to the rear, Moscow is willing to come into the league.

DUCE'S PLAN DARE

Premier Mussolini's announcement of appropriation of 1,000,000,000 lire for new Italian air armaments has come as a hard blow to league circles on the eve of the meeting of the disarmament commission.

They have no less been shocked by his declaration that war is necessary to mankind as maternity is necessary to woman.

President von Hindenburg of Germany, the world's oldest national president, will leave Berlin this week for Germany's summer capital, which will be at his estate at Neudeck, East Prussia.

The 86-year-old field marshal has been ailing for some time, but his condition has now improved. The president will be accompanied by a doctor and a male nurse. He is credited with having told old friends:

"When I leave Berlin this time I will not return again."

Carthage, who raced up and down the beach, yelling after Aeneas, who had left her, then stabbing herself to death. And Aeneas was not even her husband.

Or contrast Queen Mary, respectfully and distantly, with Catherine the Second of Russia, who knew, intimately, young and old gentlemen, exceeding in number the feet on a centipede, and she made them all rich at the expense of miserable, slaving Russian moujiks. Of course, Catherine did many fine things. For instance, she purchased at a high price the scientific library of the philosopher Diderot, in need of money, and told him to keep it with him in Paris until she could decide where to put it. She never decided while he lived, and she bought and preserved intact the six thousand volumes of Voltaire's library, after his death. But morally, she left everything to be desired. Happy the country with a king and queen like George and Mary, working, hard, always behaving well, eager to carry out the wishes of the British people.

Mussolini, observing world-wide preparation for war, and no disarmament, says, "If I must fight, I must," and gets ready, wastes no time sobbing or sighing.

Before 1940, beginning at once, he will spend one thousand million lire on fighting surface ships and the same huge sum on fighting airships.

"Man's tragic destiny is war," says he, and tells Italians to prepare for long hard times, to meet the war bills.

At least 80 per cent of Europe wants peace, and does not know how to get it.

"Man's "tragic destiny," as Mussolini says, may be war for the next few years, or generations or even centuries. But centuries are small specks of time in the life of the earth and the future of mankind.

We have been beating, cheating, fighting, enslaving, biting and eating each other for half a million years, but there are hundreds of millions of years ahead, and already there is improvement.

Civilized men do not collect heads. They do not burn captive kings alive, as Cyrus was about to burn Croesus, or force parents to look on while their children are tortured to death, or stretch men on the rack for religious differences, or saw them in two lengthwise for revenge. "Tragic war" will disappear, as cannibalism, slavery, the debtor's prison and other horrors have disappeared.

Bad news of strikes and other dissatisfaction continues. Troops in Toledo again firing on the mob, radical rioteers in New York City fighting police.

Some news is better. The Minneapolis teamsters have adjusted their difficulties and the other important strikes are settled.

How amazing that workmen of different beliefs, union and non-union should insist on settling disputes with clubs, guns and bricks, when the vote could do anything they want done, and no heads broken.

The brutal fighting recalls the Kilkenny cats, tails tied together, thrown over a clothes line. They tore each other to pieces, although the cat-owner was not there, gets no scratches. Similarly union and non-union men club and shoot each other, although the "owners," labor leaders and labor employers are free from the scene and are not scratched.

That would seem silly to an angel, looking down.

Federal Camp Mourns Loss of Mascot

Residents of Camp Curtis Guild at Wakefield, where homeless federal workers are housed, are mourning the absence of "Mickey," the camp mascot, who was killed when struck by a truck at the camp. "Mickey" leaped from the truck to chase another dog that had invaded his precincts. But he landed under the wheel of the truck and before the driver could stop, his neck had been broken.

Mickey had served for five years as mascot at the camp not only for the federal men but also by the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guardsmen and National Guard, all of whom spend part of the year at camp.

Research Data Goes to Chicago

Results of the studies of Clarence W. Dupertuis, anthropologist, who is doing research work for Harvard, will be added to the anthropometric laboratory in Chicago. He returned here from Ireland aboard the liner Britannic.

During the past five months he has made over 10,000 measurements of people in Ireland. He says he found the purest Celtic type on the west coast of the country. He had nothing but praise for his reception and said he looked forward to returning to continue his studies.

CAPTAIN BALKS GOB'S ARREST

Attempts of the Charlestown police to arrest Robert Quinlan, a pharmacist's mate at the Chelsea Naval Hospital, were frustrated today by his commanding officer, Captain R. A. Warner, who is in charge of the hospital.

Quinlan is accused of crashing into four cars in Chelsea street, Charlestown while he was driving one of the hospital ambulances. The crash occurred near Medford street and Gate 5 of the Navy Yard, an when officers sought to arrest him he took refuge on federal property.

The police today obtained a warrant for Quinlan in Charlestown municipal court, charging him with operating so as to endanger, operating under the influence and leaving the scene without making himself known after causing property damage. Capt. Warner, however, would not permit them to arrest the man.

Rites Tomorrow for Dr. Simmons

Funeral services will be held tomorrow for Dr. Fred A. Simmons, one of Boston's leading nose, ear and throat specialists, from his home in Bay State road. Burial will be in Duxbury. Dr. Simmons, who was stricken with a heart attack Friday, died at his home yesterday.

DRIVER HAPPY AT $100 FINE

Worcester, May 28—Time and again the police dived into 15 feet of water in the Metropolitan reservoir at West Boylston, seeking the body of Joseph Gregaitis, 38, of West Sterling.

Then he was found wandering along the road, half a mile from the spot where his car plunged through a fence and down the 30-foot embankment into the reservoir. He had managed to swim ashore.

In District Court he was fined $100 for driving while under the influence. It was just $100 more than he had, but he was quite cheerful as he was led to a cell.

"It was well worth it," he said. "You don't know how glad I am that I owe those $100 to the court and not to the undertaker."

Sargent School Girls Off to Camp

Ready for a month's fun and work at the Sargent School Camps on the shores of Half-Moon Lake, Peterboro, N. H., 180 girls, students at the Boston University Sargent school of physical education, and 30 instructors, leave this afternoon for the camp.

Five months of camping is required of the girls enrolled in the health and phyhical education programs. Activities will include sports of all kinds, handcraft, nature study and campcraft.

35 Flee West End Blaze; Police Save Children

Thirty-five persons, including a number of children, were driven from their homes early today when a fire, believed to be of incendiary origin, broke out in the hallway on the second floor of a five-story brick dwelling at 62 Hale street, in the West End.

The blaze was discovered when patrolmen from the North street police division saw smoke coming from the second floor. They sounded an alarm of fire from a nearby box and then raced into the building and aroused the families. So dense was the smoke in the hallways that the police and firemen had difficulty in rescuing the small children.

The blaze raced through the second and third floors, although most of the damage was done by smoke and water. The damage was estimated at $500.

Patrick Saraceno of South Margin street, owner of the building was notified of the fire and went to the scene. He told the police after an investigation that he was convinced that the building was set afire. The fire started in the rear of the second floor hallway outside of one of the apartments.

RACERS ESCAPE SPEED CRASH

Indianapolis, May 28 (INS)—Fred Frame, Los Angeles, 1932 winner of the annual Memorial Day 500-mile race here, and his riding mechanic, Al Thiesen of Dayton, O., narrowly escaped death in a spectacular crash during the practice spin on the speedway today.

Frame was speeding at more than 110 miles an hour when the steering rod on his racing car broke.

The machine hit the inside wall on th northwest turn twice and faced about in several skids, but did not turn over.

MISS RAPIER, ILL, RESTS

Ima Rapier, colortura soprano who collapsed during a recital in Steinert Hall Sunday afternoon, today was resting with friends at a country place "somewhere in New England."

The strain of overwork that cut short her program has been so great that her advisors deemed it important that she have complete rest.

As a result she did not even inform persons at 41 St. Botolph street, Back Bay, where she has been making her home, of her present whereabouts.

Washington, May 28—Bank payoff legislation for this session of Congress will meet a crucial test today when the Steagall bill goes to conference of House and Senate members.

Rep. McLeod (R), of Michigan, author of the bill for full payment of depositors in closed national banks, is confident the conference will approve and retain the provision promising relief to the extent of 1,125 million dollars.

SUPPORTERS CHEERED

This proposal was made a part of the original draft, which authorizes renewal of the existing temporary bank deposit guarantee law for one year, with an increase from $2500 to $5000 of the amount of the deposit to be insured.

Confidence that the payoff feature would be accepted by Senate conferees was voiced by Chairman Steagall of Alabama, for the House committee, who will head the negotiations from the junior chamber.

In voting the bill, the House added to the Senate draft a number of amendments which Steagall and his colleagues may trade off in their determination to save the payoff proviso from any hostility in the Senate group.

McLEOD BEGS

Meanwhile, McLeod will continue his drive for action on his original plan for paying depositors. His petition calling for a House vote on June 11 now lacks only seven of the 145 names required to force action on the floor, and the full list will probably be completed this week.

While regarding the Steagall bill as amended as a victory for the payoff campaigners, the Michigan member will seek adoption of his own bill as additional assurance that thousands of distressed depositors will get relief through federal enactment.

B'NAI B'RITH AID GIVEN GERMANS

Montreal, May 28 (AP)—Not intended to be a fund-raising organization, B'Nai B'Rith has nevertheless been able to give financial aid to many persecuted Jews in Germany since Hitler's advent to power, Frank Goldman of Lowell, Mass., told 800 delegates to the 82nd meeting of the B'Nai B'Rith district grand lodge No. 1 here. Goldman is president of the B'Nai B'Rith assembly.

Jewish representatives of the Quebec government and the city of Montreal welcomed the delegates who came from all parts of eastern Canada, New England and New York. It is the first time a B'Nai B'Rith convention has been held in this city.

Romance and Law Battle in $6,500,000 Suit

By International News Service

Monte Carlo, May 28—Romance, blood relationship and legal technicality will clash here on June 6, when hearings, which were set today, begin in Monacan law courts to determine who shall inherit a fortune of $6,500,000 (American money) accumulated by Jacob Rudgers Le Roy, who was one of the secretaries of William K. Vanderbilt.

If Romance wins, the fortune, chiefly in bonds of the gambling casino of Monte Carlo, will go to a former diswasher who turned night club dancer and entertainer—one Louis Baeza De La Quedra, of Chile.

If kinship wins, the money will be handed over to two Italians, Marcello and Ruggiero Calemani, who possess an old will naming them as the inheritors.

If legal technicalities win, the wealth will go to Henry Le Roy Lewis of London, nephew of Jacob Le Roy, who was an American citizen. Lewis contends that Le Roy was married to "Miss Beale," a woman of Italian origin who for a quarter of a century was known in Europe as Mrs. Le Roy.

Nobody then suspected there had not been a marriage, But Lewis contends that without marriage, she was not entitled to the millions she received at Le Roy's death in 1926.

A few years ago the "widow" met a young Chilean, Don Juan, the dish washer turned dancer. She was near 60. He was in his thirties. They were happy until near the end of 1931 when she became mysteriously ill. Two nephews charged the Chilean had given her drugs, and he was forced to leave.

A pompous funeral was arranged for. A gold encrusted coffin was purchased and a hearse contracted for. Then the widow regained her former health. Doctors said it was miraculous. But she revealed her strength by ordering the nephews out in their turn and demanding the Monaco authorities permit the return of the Chilean.

Then she became ill again and died.

St. Johns, Ariz., May 28—Mrs. Dorothea Irene Turley, beauty contest winner, and once acclaimed as "the venus of America" was scheduled to appear before Judge R. A. Sawyer, on a charge of "intent to murder," in the "ouija board" slaying today.

Mrs. Turley is being brought to trial in connection with the killing of her husband, Ernest J. Turley, retired gunners mate in the U. S. navy, by the couple's daughter, Mattie, 15, in December, 1933.

Mattie, when arrested after firing both barrels of a shotgun into her father's back claimed that she acted under instructions from a ouija board.

Mrs. Turley has contended the shooting was an accident. Mattie's story involved a "handsome cowboy" with whom she said her mother had been friendly.

SEAMAN DIES IN RESCUE TRY

By International News Service

New York, May 27—The story of how Charles W. Thompson, 52, of Portsmouth, N. H., captain of the barge Truro, lost his life in a vain effort to save his wife in a gale off Barnegat Light on the New Jersey Coast, was told today by Capt. Harry W. Law of the tugboat Mars.

The barges were 1200 feet apart last Saturday, with a heavy sea running, when the Truro in the center, sprang a leak. Capt. Thompson, after a futile attempt to save the vessel, went down to get his wife, Florence, 46, but the barge went down.

Thompson's body floated to the surface and was taken aboard the Mars.

REDS IN COURT GET FREE REIN TO RAP POLICE

A change of procedure by Judge Charles S. Sullivan in Charlestown court allowed admitted Communists and others on trial for anti-Nazi riots to talk themselves hoarse today.

He had previously ruled that their speeches on alleged police brutality and abuse of "the workers" would have no bearing on his decision of whether or not they are guilty of inciting a riot near the German cruiser Karlsruhe 10 days ago.

Miss Belle Lewis, who refused police her address but today was revealed as a resident of Havelock street, Dorchester, made the lengthiest speech during the morning. Her subject was the NRA and the "capitalistic police."

Papel Howard, 20, a student at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, appeared as a defendant for the first time today. He was ordered in default last Friday but Judge Sullivan removed it today when Howard's counsel explained the student could not appear Friday on account of an examination.

Miss Lewis, under cross-examination of Captain James F. Dailey, police prosecutor, said she has been a member of the Communist party for five years.

"Didn't you think the police represented the law that day?" Captain Dailey asked.

"Yes, the capitalistic law, not the law of the worker," came the reply.

Other witnesses today were William F. Potter of Rutland square, South End; Charles Gilman of Commercial street, North End, both defendants; David Walter of Morton street, Dorchester, and Josephine E. Nicolette of Newbury street, Back Bay, who were bystanders.

3 MORE TO FACE OLEO CHARGES

Indictments involving at least three more men in connection with the investigation by agents of the Department of Justice of adulterated oleomargarine seemed imminent today.

Seventy thousand pounds of the adulterated product, distributed in this section, have been checked, along with the machinery used to make it appear as "creamery butter," it was learned. One angle of the investigation leads to Chicago.

Assistant United States Attorney Charles A. Rome, in charge of the investigation admitted today he expects a confession from a fourth man interested in the butter racket. A piggery in Stoneham, a cheese factory in the North End and a hide-out for counterfeiters in a Boston suburb figure in the investigation, it was learned.

Champion Ready for Finals

Champion Ward in Capital for Spelling Tourney

By THE SPELLING BEE EDITOR.

Washington, D. C., May 28—Young David Andrew Ward, Metropolitan Boston's undisputed Spelling Champion, arrived here this morning at 7:30 on the Federal Express. He had sat up until nearly 1 o'clock in his drawing room aboard the train engaged in the most intensive home-work period of his school career.

The young champion, accompanied by his mother, Mrs. George Ward, taxied directly to the Hamilton Hotel with the freedom of a full day for final preparations for the National Grade School Spelling Championships, which begins at 9 o'clock tomorrow, in the New National Museum.

Tonight David and his mother will attend the first of the functions arranged for the 19 Metropolitan champions who compete for the National Spelling title tomorrow.

READY FOR FINAL

Asked what his first impression of Washington was, the Boston Metropolitan Champion said:

"I'm so anxious to see everything of interest in Washington that I dare not look at it yet. I want to keep my mind right on the job about the hard part of this trip—that is, the Spelling Bee tomorrow.

"Once it's over I will enjoy every minute of this sightseeing vacation with mother, as guest of the Boston Evening American and Sunday Advertiser. Right now the main thing is not to get excited, so I'm just going to spend the day studying and be ready to enjoy tonight's party."

The 19 regional champions who will compete for the national spelling title will arrive at the New National Museum tomorrow morning for the preliminary program beginning at 9 o'clock. Subsequently, the actual spelling will be broadcast over the Columbia Network and will be heard in Boston over Station WAAB from 12:15 p. m. until 1 p. m.

SMALL TRADES TO FIX OWN ERA PRICES

By International News Service

Washington, May 28—The NRA today started removing the fair practices and price-fixing restrictions it has imposed upon the scores of so-called service trades and industries as a whole, such as cleaners and dyers, barbers, laundries, etc.

President Roosevelt issued an executive order authorizing Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson to suspend the fair practices and price-fixing regulations in codes affecting this type of trade and industry in favor of local codes drafted by the local trades and which are approved by 85 per cent of their membership.

The local codes first must be approved by the NRA before their membership will be allowed to continue to fly the Blue Eagle.

Mr. Roosevelt's action in relaxing the general code regulations over the service trades and industries does not affect the principal features of the National Recovery Act, namely, the ban on child labor, the fixing of maximum hours of work and minimum hours of pay and the privileges extended labor to organize and bargain collectively with their employers.

TRIAL PERIOD CITED

"No industry would give up the gains we have made," said the President in respect to these NRA provisions.

The President said he decided to allow local groups in the service trades and industries, after designation by the administrator, to write their own codes of fair trade practices because a "trial period of some months has shown that while most industries after organization for this work and a little experience with it, can secure uniform national results, there are others to which a great degree of autonomous local self-government is desirable."

"Most industries have a national community of economic interest even though the operation of some of their units is local," Mr. Roosevelt said. "There are others which, notwithstanding their having national trade associations, do not actually integrate themselves nationally.

SELF GOVERNMENT URGED

"A trial period of some months has shown that while most industries, after organization for this work and a little experience with it, can secure uniform national results, there are other to which a greater degree of autonomous local self-government is desirable."

French Pilots Strive to Make Repairs in Air; Send Radio Message They May Be Forced to Land

Brooklyn, to provide control for 10 (G.M.T.) (9 a. m., E.S.T.). Advise French Ambassador.

(Signed) "ROSSI. CODOS."

The time given for the arrival over New York was evide-tly in error. A similar error was made in the massage picked up by the steamship Champlain. These errors led to the belief earlier today that the French airship had already passed Boston at an early hour.

AIRPORT IS ACTIVE

Preparations were hurriedly made at Floyd Bennett Field in New York to receive the fliers, the gates were locked and a police detail rushed to the field.

When later indications came that the Frenchmen might possibly land in Boston, similar preparations were made at Boston Airport.

Among the widely differing and conflicting reports was one stating that the fliers would attempt to reach Cleveland for a landing if immediate repairs were found not to be necessary when they reached Boston and then New York.

Extremely thick fog greeted the daring fliers as they approached and passed over Newfoundland and forced them to alter their course slightly.

The rising sun greeted them as they winged their way over Nova Scotia and weather reports promised perfect flying conditions as they sped down the northern coastline of the continent.

The giant Bleriot plane, in which the pair established the present long distance flying record of 5657 miles made last August in a flight from New York to Rayak, Syria, acted smoothly during the dangerous western passage over the Atlantic.

ASK FOR BEARINGS

No difficulty was encountered by the fliers until 10 p. m. (Boston time) last night, when they radioed to the Cape Race radio station for bearings to help them navigate through thick fog over the Grand Banks.

The pair then charted their course toward Nova Scotia, experiencing some difficulty in the fog. They conquered this obstacle, however, and at 5:20 a. m. (Boston time) were reported flyng over a time) were reported flying over a Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

French Fliers Are Promoted

San Diego Is Goal of Brave French Airmen

By International News Service

New York, May 28—Having crossed the Atlantic over the difficult east-to-west route in one of the speediest ocean flights ever made, Lieutenants Paul Codos and Maurice Rossi, veteran French airmen roared down the New England coast today on a non-stop flight from Paris.

Attempting to establish a new world's long distance flying record, Codos and Rossi had San Diego, Calif., as their destination, a point 6200 miles from Paris. The pair already hold the present record of 5657 miles, made last August in a flight from New York to Rayak, Syria.

FLIERS' ROUTE INDEFINITE

The fliers' exact route was indefinite, depending entirely upon changing weather conditions and being charted as they proceeded along their course. Radio bulletins gave latest weather reports, and from these the pair chose the course most favorable.

It was their intention to pass over New York.

From New York th Frenchmen expected to proceed across the United States over the most direct route, lying just north of Dayton, Ohio, Indianapolis and St. Louis, and then southwesterly over the Transcontinental and Western Air Lines route. This would take them over Texas, New Mexico and Arizona to San Diego.

If all goes well, they would reach their California destination by noon tomorrow.

In a smooth but perilous takeoff, Codos and Rossi left Paris at 5:10 a. m. yesterday (12:10 a. m. Boston time), lifting their nine-ton Bleriot plane into the air after a lumbering run of a mile and a half across the field. The huge ship carried 1800 gallons of gasoline.

The pair averaged 125 m.h.p. for the first seven hours, and their average for the entire ocean voyage was over 100 m.h.p., an unusually high figure.

CHAMPAGE ON PLANE

Champagne featured the refreshments carried by the two Frenchmen. They also had coffee, cold chicken, and fruit to bear them up on their long trip.

Their big plane, the same in which Codos and Rossi set their New York-to-Syria record, was the Joseph Le Brix, powered by a 650-horsepower Hispano Suiza engine. Its estimated range is 6565 miles.

Using their radio frequently, the fliers kept in almost constant touch with the world throughout their ocean hop. Their messages at the beginning and end of the water hop were received at European and American land stations, respectively, while ships at sea relayed their messages from mid-ocean.

At midnight, Boston time, the Mackay Radio and Telegraph Company, picked up the following message, which failed to give the airplane's position:

"We are charting course toward Nova Scotia. Navigation difficult, piloting laborious. No outside visibility. All well aboard.

"Rossi and Codos."

About an hour previously, at 10:48 p. m., the Chatham, Mass., station of the Radio Marine Corporation intercepted a message from the ship telling of the fog the fliers were battling.

"Tried to get bearings from Cape Race (Nfld)," the message stated, "but intense fog prevented. Wind, light, visibility poor."

The last time the airmen gave their position before crossing over Newfoundland was at 7 p. m. (Boston time) when they were about 400 miles off Cape Race, Newfoundland.

O'REILLY'S KIN TO WED HERE

While wedding intentions were being filed in Cambridge today by Rev. Donald J. Campbell of New Haven, Conn., and Miss Hester Hocking, 24, granddaughter of John Boyle O'Reilly, the poet, the engagement of the bride-to-be's sister, Joan, Radcliffe student, to Edward H. Kracke, Jr., of New Jersey was revealed.

Miss Hester Hocking, who lives with her parents, Prof. and Mrs. William Ernest Hocking, Quincy street, Cambridge, is a graduate of Radcliffe. Professor Hocking is the Alford professor of religion and civil polity at Harvard. Mr. Campbell is assistant rector of St. John's Episcopal church, New Haven, Conn. The wedding will take place in Cambridge June 15.

Yale Student Dying in Autos' Crash

New Haven, Ct., May 28 (AP)—Two Yale sophomores were in a hospital today as a result of what police said was a head-on collision of two automobiles on the Milford turnpike in West Haven. Four others were hurt.

Kennedy Bryan Parker, 21, one of the Yale students, and the son of Dr. John E. Parker of Orange, N. J., was said to be dying as a result of the crash which occurred yesterday. The other student, Frederic W. Wurzburg, 20, of Park avenue, New York city, was severely hurt.

Mother of Rossi Begged Him Not to Try Hop

Paris, May 28—All Paris is on the alert for news of its flying heroes, Lieutenants Paul Codos and Maurice Rossi, whose stuttering wireless messages from the lonely mid-Atlantic told of their progress on the most ambitious westward flight ever tried.

Rossi's elderly mother and his wife spent the day at their home, scanning messages which the air ministry communicated to them immediately upon receipt.

Rossi's wife said the flier's mother, who had begged him on bended knees not to risk his life in another Atlantic crossing, was resigned to the flight now that it has started.

"She is very courageous," said Mrs. Rossi, "and eagerly follows the news of the journey."

Authorities here expected to be able to keep contact with the fliers through the S.S. Europa and later the S.S. Champlain.

From the time the fliers first unexpectedly announced Saturday that they were ready to start on a 6100-mile flight across an ocean and a continent to California, their arrangements for departure moved forward smoothly and swiftly.

They soared into a dawn-streaked sky at 4:10 a. m., Greenwich Time, (12:10 a. m., Sunday, Boston Time) with a nine-ton plane. It was only 10 minutes from the time they had first announced they would take off.

The huge silvery high-winged craft rocked and bumped dangerously with its load of 2055 gallons of fuel over a rough runway, took the air easily and soared toward the east before turning northwest toward the coast of Ireland and the vast expanse of ocean that lay ahead of them.

2 Planes, Graf Over Ocean, Give Future Travel Picture

By STUART MARONEY
Associated Press Foreign Staff

Paris, May 28—The extraordinary situation of two airplanes and the dirigible Graf Zeppelin traversing the Atlantic simultaneously today gave a hint of the future of international aviation.

The French long distance plane Joseph Lebrix was flying the north Atlantic, bound for a transcontinental trip across the United States; the French mail plane Arc-En-Ciel—the Rainbow—was flying the south Atlantic, bound for Brazil, and the German dirigible likewise was on its way to Brazil.

French air enthusiasts were particularly delighted by the speed of their airplanes over the Zeppelin which has been flying the mails to South America. France, like Germany, wants the South American air commerce.

The Zeppelin left Tangier an hour and a half ahead of the passage of the Arc-En-Ciel above that point, but at 7:15 a. m. today, the Zeppelin had only reached Cape Verde while the Arc-En-Ciel was 300 miles out at sea.

From Dakar, Africa, came the report at 8:30 a. m., Eastern standard time, that the Arc-En-Ciel had reported her position only 700 miles from Natal and an hour later she reported that she had established communication with that point. Her South Atlantic jump is a matter of 1900 miles.

POSSE IS OFF ON ROBLES CLUE

By International News Service

Tucson, Ariz., May 28—A posse of sheriff's deputies was dispatched today to the desert wilderness north of Sasabe, an Arizona border town, in the belief the kidnapers of June Robles were hiding in a deserted ranch house in that region.

Acting on a report from a peace officer at Ruby, a mining town north of Sasabe, a carload of officers, armed with machine guns and tear gas bombs, left for Sasabe, and Nogales police were notified to bottle up all roads in that vicinity.

Undersheriff C. S. Farrar said he expected developments soon in the Robles case. "We are working now on what appears to be the best clue yet."

6 BILLS RUSHED TO BRING END TO CONGRESS

By WILLIAM K. HUTCHINSON
International News Service Staff Correspondent

Washington, May 28—A six-point major legislative program was laid down by administration leaders today in the hope of adjourning Congress by June 9.

The program consisted of the President's reciprocal tariff bill, the new silver remonetization bill, the Wagner labor disputes bill, the new stock market measure, the administration's loans to industry bill and the billion-dollar relief appropriation. All other measures, if controversial, apparently will be abandoned.

The leaders indicated the President desires Congress to adjourn before the foreign debt installments fall due June 15. With all the House and a third of the Senate facing elections this fall, most of the members also want to go home.

TARIFF ACTION DUE

The new tariff act, giving the President power to slash import duties as an incentive to the negotiation of trade expansion agreements with foreign governments, was scheduled to pass the Senate this week.

The new silver bill is next on the program. It has the President's endorsement and will start through the House this week.

The Wagner labor disputes bill has the almost unanimous approval of the Senate commerce committee.

STOCK COMPROMISE REACHED

The stock market bill was in final form, after Senate and House conferees agreed on a compromise. The conference report will be adopted this week by both House and Senate, as the final steps in its enactment. The bill would create an independent commission to regulate the various securities exchanges throughout the country.

The loans to industry bill was in conference to settle differences between House and Senate. It provided for loans to industry by both the RFC and Federal Reserve Banks.

The billion-dollar relief appropriation will be passed as the last measure on the program.

IMPS ADVANCE ON BOSTON

The IMPS are coming!

Hundreds and thousands of them are advancing on Boston ,in disorderly ranks, to tantalize and tease the brains of determined citizens and to render them, at times, almost frantic.

They have captivated all Europe and have driven more than 10,000,000 persons delightfully mad. They have scampered over the veldt and the deserts of Africa.

In Boston they will drive men into taverns and draw other men out and they will keep men and women up and drive them to their beds in exhaustion.

Fliers, movie stars, show girls, circus performers, savants, clergymen, clerks and others have worked themselves into a frenzy over the Imps—and now they're coming here.

Watch for them. There will be further details in the Boston Evening American.

Benson to Show Jungle Animals

A young rhinoceros from the jungles of Tanganyika, a three-year-old elephant and several other animals will be on display at the famous animal farm of John T. Benson at Nashua, N. H., beginning today.

The animals arrived in Boston yesterday aboard the Eastern Steamship liner New York in charge of Walter Schulz, son of Christopher Schulz, famous wild animal collector. Schulz was met at the pier by Benson and his father, who arrived here last week with the most valuable wild animal cargo to be shipped here in several years.

Wednesday Midnight Ends Mt. Rushmore Contest

The midnight of day after tomorrow.

That will be Wednesday night at 12 o'clock. That also will mark the close of the Mt. Rushmore memorial inscription competition sponsored by the Boston Evening American, Boston Sunday Advertiser and associated Hearst newspapers.

The mail of the local Rushmore editor during the past few days has been heavy with texts submitted by adults and others not connected with any school or college. These contestants will be heard from through their own sectional committees.

It is the intention of the national committee to make known the winners of the great prize and the other awards on July 4, Independence Day, but this will depend on the pressure of national affairs, for President Roosevelt will have to have time to act in his capacity as a member of the national board.

But all contestants may rest assured that every text submitted will be given close attention and that none will be overlooked, because no one knows where the person lives who will write the epic that will be selected.

The main point to remember just now is that your text must be in the hands of the right committee by Wednesday midnight.

There will be no extension of time under any circumstances.

Midnight of May 30 marks the close of the competition.

The motion picture, "The Unknown Blonde," is said to be an amazing expose of the divorce racket. Edward Arnold, Dorothy Revier, John Miljan and Walter Catlett play important roles in the film, which starts an engagement at the RKO Boston Theater Wednesday.

For more details on the search for "The Unknown Blonde" be sure and read tomorrow's American.

SLADANG GIFTS TOMORROW

Awards in the Boston Evening American sladang contest will be announced tomorrow, at which time successful contestants for the daily prizes of $5 and 10 tickets to the Majestic Theater will learn whether or not they have been successful.

The sladang is a mystery no longer, because this ferocious beast is shown in the gripping picture "Beyond Bengal" at that theater. The sladang, if you haven't seen the picture, is an enormous wild ox, standing as high as seven feet at the shoulder, and is given a rating even higher than the tiger, the lion and the elephant for ferocity.

He is a terror to be reckoned with and is the most unapproachable animal in existence. His haunts are the open places on the Malay Peninsula, in Southeastern Asia, and up to the time the expedition headed by Harry Schenck went there to film material for "Beyond Bengal," the sladang had never been photographed by a motion picture camera.

JUVENILES TO GIVE REVUE

Gertrude Dolan

Juvenile songsters and dancers, from four years old up, will perform in a miniature musical revue at the 16th annual recital of the Dolan-De Petro Studios on the night of Wednesday, June 20, at the Repertory Theater, Back Bay.

Younger pupils, most of them facing an audience for the first time, will be featured in first of two acts, and in this division the tots elaborately costumed, will answer the Legionnaires' query, "Where's Elmer?"

In the second act, older pupils will perform in a revue of novelty song, dance and ensemble numbers, among which will be the popular carioca, a colorful ballet group, acrobatic and tap ensembles and many novelty solo numbers.

Rites Tomorrow for Mrs. Dean

Funeral services will be held tomorrow at St. Mary's Church, in Randolph, for the late Mrs. Fannie Finan Dean of River street, Randolph, who died Saturday after a short illness. Mrs. Dean was the wife of William H. Dean, member of one of Randolph's oldest families.

ERA CONCERTS ATTRACT MANY

By MOSES SMITH

The first of the ERA concerts at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, for which Will Dodge conducts an orchestra of some 40 men, attracted a sizeable and appreciative audience to the Stone Room and adjacent galleries and lobbies.

The program was frankly popular in its appeal, containing nothing more weighty than the Schubert "Rosamunde" overture at the beginning and two numbers from Bizet's "Arlesienne" suite, while in between were numbers by Bolzoni, Herbert, Strauss of the waltzes, Pochon, Romberg and Tellam. Such a program, free to the public, obviously has a place, and the public is by that much indebted to the ERA administration as well as to the Museum, which offered its halls for the setting.

Unfortunately, Mr. Dodge's announcements and brief descriptions of the numbers—in themselves constituting a good idea—had to be repeated in triplicate, so to say, to the various sections of the audience. The proceedings were thus slowed down so that a program which was announced to take an hour consumed far more than that time. Moreover, it seems to me that the setting of other museum concerts in the past—the space under the rotunda—is better than that of yesterday's concert. What the latter may gain acoustically it more than loses because of the rather cramped quarters.

These things are relatively unimportant as well as remediable. It was of more moment that the music-making was comparatively uninspired, lacking zest. At best, it was competent; at worst, ragged. How much this condition was due to insufficient allowance of ERA for rehearsal was not apparent. Whatever the reason, Mr. Dodge's basic idea is too worthy to be partly nullified by insecure performance. Not every concert need be top-notch for the listener to receive great pleasure from it. But we have a right a expect the performers' best, and the conditions of the concert should be planned so that the performers may give their best.

Death Feared Near for Gov. Rolph

San Francisco, May 28 (US)—Governor James Rolph's condition today was extremely critical.

Dr. Harold E. Fraser, his physician, after visiting him at the Walter Linforth ranch near Los Catos, said: "He is a very weak man. I was told by his nurses that he slept well during the night. But even so, he is very sick."

CHARLES RAY PLANS MOVIE COMEBACK IN "LADIES SHOULD LISTEN" ROLE

Lights and Shadows

By George Holland

In announcing an ERA project "to promote community drama and to provide five months' employment for 142 persons," the City-Wide Emergency Committee on Health and Recreation begins a communique to the press as follows:

"Members of the 'legitimate' stage, never more 'at leisure' than today because of the 'movies' as well as the depression, are about to be given a break." The dispatch then goes on to tell that there will be two professional city-wide drama groups of 50 members each, and 15 amateur community drama groups, the entire project under the general direction of William P. Long, park commissioner.

I do not know the name of the "public relations counsel" who composed the press communique, but he or she missed a reason for the quantity of actors "at leisure" when no mention was made of the cut-rate artists, the throwaway dealers, who cajole the theater-going public to attend their theaters by the snare that the public is getting $2.00 worth in entertainment for 40 cents. The group operating in Boston evacuated the city Saturday with a promise (or threat) to return in the Fall. And they will probably be back, as I understand that the theater code being drawn in Washington will permit the "throwaway racket" to endure, with reservations. If the code-brains in Washington are that limp, so be it! The problem will remain where it belongs, with the legitimate theater managers and producers.

Park Commissioner Long

This "throwaway racket" this new Frankenstein of legitimate theatre production and operation was reared by second-hand producers, unable or disinclined to try to create something for the theatre. They found foolish managers ready to sell their established properties for "copying" in certain cities of the road. Boston, at first, was not included, but the throwaway boys found that they could invade this strangely somnolent town without too much opposition.

Now comes the full force of the "kick-back." Laurence Schwab was ready to bring his new show "Snatch as Snatch Can" to Boston before New York next fall. He won't. Many Broadway shows available for key cities next season will omit Boston. Why? These shows pay actors real salaries; they carry a real press agent as well as a real manager; they operate as road shows and carry a crew of stage hands instead of representing their operation as "stock companies," with no travelling crew necessary. Hence they have to get legitimate theater prices for their seats. And they cannot compete in a community fallen prey to the "five seats for the price of one" racket.

Production has been curtailed by the menace of the cut-rate operators. The benighted management of Actors' Equity Association has been bamboozled into apparently believing that this throwaway cut-rate business is good for its membership, and the apparently unitiate group of code directors at Washington seem to know nothing whatsoever as to what it's all about.

I know little of the ERA project. If it will give shows for nothing, that is only 40 cents less than the cut-rate's price, and I do not suppose the owners of the seven or eight white pachydermus that were once tax-paying theaters, devoted to the stage, are to be considered.

* * *

In line with all this, there's a bit of spirit in the young producer, S. M. Chartock, who brings his Gilbert and Sullivan revivals to the Shubert tonight. With the cut-raters gone, morevoer, he has a chance for profit—the first that will have been taken from a legitimate theater since the cut-raters set up camp in Hollis st.

Mr. Chartock says, in a letter about my stand against "the unfair practice of cut-rates, giveaways, etc.," that:

"I wish to express my admiration and gratitude towards someone who finally has had the courage to do something about a practice which gradually but surely is becoming a menace to the theater.

"It is self-evident, what with mounting costs, that in order to serve the public with a production equal to the original New York standard, (and surely Boston is entitled to that), that a fair price at the box-office must be maintained." I'll quote more from him at a later date.

Douglas MacLean Persuades Pal to Again Try His Luck in Cary Grant Film

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Motion Picture Editor Universal Service

(Copyright, 1934, by Universal Service, Inc.)

Los Angeles, May 28—Charlie Ray, who was made rich and famous by the movies and, by a strange trick of fate, later robbed of both, is planning a comeback in a Paramount picture. He hasn't been on the screen since he played opposite Corinne Griffith in "The Garden of Eden" in 1928, just when his popularity was beginning to wane.

Loath to attempt to buck the current and try for a comeback, Charlie was finally talked into making a picture by his friend, Douglas MacLean. Charlie will play a part in "Ladies Should Listen" opposite Cary Grant and Frances Drake. Here's good luck to him.

Louella O. Parsons

I will say for Pan Berman, he is doing his best to give Ann Harding a good cast in "The Fountain." Pan, by the way, remains in charge at RKO. He did his best to get somebody to sit in his place, but M. H. Aylesworth and B. B. Kahane insisted that Pan do the honors when Merian Cooper refused the job. Violet Kemble Cooper is coming to Hollywood to play one of the leading roles. And Jean Hersholt, who did such a swell job in "Men in White," will play the Dutchman, one of the best roles in the story.

* * *

Wallace Smith, ex-newspaperman and well known author, has turned producer. Mr. Smith announced his plans at a luncheon to a group of newspapermen who listened with interest to Professor Smith's plan to explore Mexico for movie purposes. The first scenes of the picture will be shot in Acapulco, with pictures of the natives. The latter half will be filmed atop a mountain where a negroid tribe, which fought against Cortez lives, and remains in hiding away from all civilization. Wallie will also bring back alive—on the screen, I mean—a lot of alligators, which he will track to their favorite stream and film.

Violet Kemble Cooper

Dear Odd McIntyre:

That was a very nice piece you put in your column about me and I am grateful. I remember you when I was on the Morning Telegraph. You were very kind to me and to all the other people on the newspaper. You haven't changed since those days. What a hit you made in Los Angeles. The film people, who usually dislike having these out-of-town writers chronicle their doings, enjoy every word you write. You never print malicious gossip and never write destructive articles. The inner circle out here enjoys knowing you and they feel you will not turn around and make up a lot of hooey after you meet them.

Jungle Punch Packs 'Beyond Bengal'

By HARLEIGH SCHULTZ

In the sheer stir of excitement in the raw, "Beyond Bengal" leaves naught to be desired in the way of jungle thrills. The picture, now to be seen at the Majestic theater, is without peer, in motion pictures, as a duel to the death between man, and the fang and claw. Again and yet again, through its camera narrative, appear suspenseful passages that beat anything you ever did glimpse in man-made melodrama.

Harry Schenck, who made the movie in the wilds of Malay, is present this week, to voice these lights and shadows, seething with action, as authentic. Be that as it may, they are certainly effective in setting up a terrific audience reaction of suspense and breath-taking attention.

This department (speaking only for itself) is of the opinion that no picture has been made of wild animals at so great a cost of limb, and even life.

But it is not all the drama of death's dangers in this jungle country. Schenck is seen at the beginning, assembling his expedition, under the auspices of the Sultan of Perak (seen in person). Among the personnel is a lady, Joan Baldwin, introduced as a British scientist; there is Badri, the interpreter; there is Nain Sei, sharpshooter extraordinary; Tao Binn, "Number One Native," and a true ace of heroism; and best of all, there are Ali, the boy, and Bee, the native girl.

Off they go, a vast safari of 1600 persons. Over the hills and into the dales; into the dense growth where pythons hang like pendulous perils, and tiger and leopard lurk to doom the straggler. Great herds of wild elephants, their queer cries caught shrill and piercing, stampede, and offer unforgettable visions of brute strength, in flight, and attacking the men in frail boats. And, if you're interested in rare animals, the sladang is also pictured.

The natives beat up the bush, and big cats rush and roar; luckily, time and again, Nain Sei's rifle shoots true. But the most horrific passages come in the crossing of the river of a myriad crocodiles; here the the scenes are truly beyond belief. Many a native sinks from sight, and you thrill when Tao Binn, a prayer on his lips, dives to rescue a comrade.

There is a romance, and it is offered by Bee and Ali. She is an attractive darkskinned lass, Ali a brave Malay lad.

At the moment I am perfectly willing to confess, that if there is anything stagey about "Beyond Bengal," it is surely just a matter of thin suspicion. It does appear to be just what Schenck says it is—authentic.

Expert Horror Film Feature for Keith's

For goose-flesh and chills up the spine, there is "The Black Cat," at Keith's Memorial; and to let you down from the tenseness of a taut hour of horrors, along come Jimmy Durante and Lupe Velez to loosen the strings of your inner being by their mad doings in "Strictly Dynamite." Each film amply satisfies in its own way.

Supposed to be Edgar Allan Poe's great short story, "The Black Cat" has taken the well known Hollywood liberties with the original. Utterly unlike the Poe theme, it yet packs all the punches of weirdness, suspense and excitement. Its best angles are its direction and the presence of those two demons, Bela "Dracula" Lugosi and Boris "Frankenstein" Karloff. In a conspiracy to give you the horrors, they succeed most admirably.

Lupe Velez

Lugosi is a psychiatrist, mortally hating Karloff, a scientist. Accident brings them together, and also throw under their evil spell a couple of honeymooners whom you will recognize as David Manners and Jacqueline Wells (in "Tillie and Gus," you will recall). The black cat weaves in and out; the mad scientist schemes to make the bride a sacrifice in one of his eerie rites; Lugosi puts in hair-raising licks on his own account, and pretty soon you are thinking correctly (unless you be all absorbed in the terrific drama being unfolded on screen) that this is the most expertly concocted of all similar photoplays.

The cast is capable clear through. Lugosi and Karloff are at their worst—they harrow you no end. So the film, enjoying their joint effort, is a horrific triumph.

"Strictly Dynamite" is, very properly, the antidote—it takes off the chill. The plot is a burlesque on broadcasting, deftly directed by Elliott Nugent. Mirth is its purpose, and laughter is its outcome for the audience. Durante and Miss Velez are madly merry, and they have excellent aids in William Gargan, Norman Foster, Marian Nixon and Eugene Pallette, while the Four Mills Brothers also appear. H. S.

We enjoyed a delightful evening during the past week-end at the opening of the Fo'ca'sle at Marblehead . . . Ken Reeves and his band played the popular hits of the day in their own inimitable style and the E. N. O. and we tripped the light fantastic until dawn, almost. Summer Dance Series Opens in June

Happy news for the many members of the younger set who plan to stay in town during the summer months is the announcement by the officers of the New Dancers Club of a series of summer formal dances, the first of which wil be held at the Barclay Club the latter part of June.

Soft lights and romantic music lured a throng of fair things and their escorts out to the Sandy Burr Country Club this weekend for the May formal of the Dancers Club.

Among the many dancers Miss Charlotte Cox was particularly outstanding as a model of chic in a beige ensemble the cape of which was ermined trimmed. Her escort was Edward J. Dillon. Miss Martha Perrin of Welesley College in a dainty flowered pastel satin was the reason for the happy smiles of J. Raoul St. Pierre of Harvard College, her escort.

The Quest for Quiet

ADJUTANT
EXECUTIVE

LIKE FIELD OFFICERS who maintain contact with flanking units during an advance, sales and purchasing executives know the need for swift liaison. During the present business upswing they must be in constant touch with factory, office, jobbers, dealers, salesmen. The telephone has become, more than ever, the effective adjutant of the business executive.

Low inventories point to the need of rapid communication to meet present-day business practices.

We, on our part, anticipating this need, have devised improved methods of communication that can be adapted to the requirements of practically any sales or purchasing organization. Not only is a great network of voice-highways available, but believing that its wider use will help business recovery, we have organized a group of specialists. These men know the various forms of communication, and are trained to apply them to the specific businesses they are designed to serve.

Business executives, large and small, are invited to make use of the services of this group, which may be had without charge by calling the Telephone Manager.

Thomas Votes "No" When He Doesn't Understand

By GILBERT SELDES

"I ALWAYS vote 'No!' when I don't understand something," said Senator Thomas of Oklahoma, the other day, and put himself into the list of the immortals. He combined a sound political practice, a familiar human instinct, and an honest confession of occasional ignorance, all in nine and a half words. You can't ask more than that and even if you do ask, you aren't likely to get it.

It would be nice if Senator Thomas could persuade his fellow members to tell all, as charmingly and as briefly as he has told. Aren't there a few who always vote "Yes" when they do not understand, on the principle that anything they do not understand must be better than anything they do? Or on the principle that any change is better than the blessings we now enjoy?

And wouldn't it be a good idea, encouraging to the clever American people, to persuade us that understanding is still considered a useful thing in Congress? We who stagger along trying to discover what one-tenth of all the laws mean and what their effect is likely to be, would breathe deep breaths of joy if we were sure that someone understood them before they were passed.

TWO and a half million men and women are now members of the Communist party in Russia. Although a small number of people actually govern, these millions are the power which controls and rules the Soviets. In America, some 32 million people cast votes, but I doubt whether two million of us really rule our country. Or care to. Or would know how to.

On the other hand, about two and a half million people in the United States received more than $60 a week during the great boom—they were the prosperous class. It is a good thing to put the figures side by side: the rulers of Russia and the prosperous in America. We say that ruling ought to be in the hands of more people in Russia; and I feel sure that Russians would say that comfort and good money ought to be in more hands in America.

THERE is another difference. We do not train people in the ways of using and spending their money. And the Russians are training a vast number of people in the art of managing a country; in the business of producing and distributing and in the more delicate business of governing. They are going to create an enormous body of men and women capable of thinking about the affairs of state and capable of action. It will be something new in the world.

They are learning production from us and from other nations which were a little more prompt in allowing Russians to manage their own affairs without moral indignation. But where they are learning distribution and statecraft, I do not know. They seem to be getting along fairly well, though.

ALLOW ME TO SAY

By C. HANSON TOWNE

WE were wondering the other day if all the "improvements" of modern times were inevitably in the nature of improvements. There can be no doubt that wireless is a miracle that will never cease to make us pause and ponder. We see how wonderful it is that the whole universe is knot together through the messages that fly through the air; that every ship that sails the lonely seas is no longer lonely, but part of a vast system of contact.

Mysterious forces are constantly at work for the benefit of mankind, and we are dazed by the multifarious marvels that surround us. News is flashed everywhere. There is no spot anywhere too remote for its reception. The first Atlantic cable marked a new era that baffles the mind, and transatlantic telephones are now taken for granted.

THEN we got to thinking of the silent pictures and how they had been superseded by the talkies in no time at all. If you witnessed a silent film now you would be inclined to smile tolerantly.

Yet is it not too bad that the art of pantomime has vanished on the screen? For pantomime is a universal language. The merest gesture can be understood where words, no matter how eloquent, fail of their purpose. A Chinaman, as well as you and I, knows at once what Charlie Chaplin's sad smile means. He would realize any predicament that great artists might be in without the need of an interpreter. One glance, one sudden movement, one shift of the eyes, and the whole story would be told. The silent films linked all nations in the great brotherhood of understanding; and a picture shown in Java met with the same response it found in New York or London or Berlin or Paris.

But the talkies took us back again to the parochial point of view. No matter how great a German actor may be, he must first learn our language in order to impress us. No Russian star could shine for us with the same radiance if he appeared before us speaking silent words.

The human voice is a powerful asset on the stage, but every actor knows the value of silence in a scene which calls for intelligent listening and for a quiet indication of what is going on in a character's mind. Voiceless clowns tell us more than silver-tongued orators, and we know all that Pierrot suffered, not because he told us in words, but in expressive actions. "The hills are mute—yet how they speak of God." Not only to me and you, but to everyone on the earth Silence has been called golden. It is more than that—it is the only language which all mortals understand.

READING & WRITING

By WILLIAM SOSKIN

THE title of a new volume of George Bernard Shaw items, Short Stories, Scraps and Shavings, is distinctly suggestive of a refuse heap, and therefore to a certain degree appropriate. Its contents go back all the way to the 1880's and come down to Mr. Shaw's recent allegory of agnosticism, The Adventures of the Black Girl in Her Search for God.

The immediate question whether these early works of Mr. Shaw wear well must be answered in the negative. Most of the essays and short stories in this volume which may have had the air of witty iconoclasm in their own day sound now very much like the smart arguments of the village atheist with whose learning and intelligence one use to be impressed.

"If God is omnipotent," the village atheist would say, "why did He have to create only that kind of good which required evil for contrast? Or is He not a benevolent God?"

And I used to run home breathlessly challenging my father with the argument, completely fascinated with the wizardry of the village atheist's mind.

Even the newest work in the Shaw volume—The Adventures of the Black Girl in Her Search for God—is directly related to the village atheist tradition. It comes as the last contribution in the book and, strangely enough, as a climax to the series of old-fashioned iconoclasms Bernard Shaw committed during all these years.

It is as though Shaw, having escorted an old drunken woman to the gates of Heaven in one story, having revealed the essential reasonableness and lack of amatory adventurousness in Don Juan in another satirical bit, having indulged in a witty essay in Creative Evolution and carried on the amusing high-links of his Back to Methuselah, decided that he had not, after all, succeeded in disproving the existence of an essential God. Therefore he took a knobkerry and placed it in the hands of his Black Girl and set her to destroying the Almighty as He appeared in various guises to Job, to Moses, to Koheleth, to Micah and to Jesus.

ONE of the stories in this volume of Shavian shavings is the famous tale of the German Kaiser and the little girl wandering on a battlefield, the story which was suppressed during the war as injurious to the morale of the nation. In it the Kaiser is something of a helpless ass who says "Ich habe es nicht gewollt" when men are blown to their death, and who finally describes himself as a fellow who must say things that neither he nor anyone else believes.

In A Dressing Room Secret, published in 1910, we have a reminder of some of Shaw's lively dramatic criticism. In it the bust of Shakespeare speaks and admits that his play Othello is nothing more than wanton mischief and murder and that Lady Macbeth is really based on his wife, Ann Hathaway, because she thinks everything her husband does is wrong and that she can do it better.

One of the most amusing of the occasional frivolities in the volume is Shaw's portrayal of G. K. Chesterton. Chesterton is known as Mr. Champernoon in the play, and a pretty lady says this to him:

"You are the most incorrigible flirt in England and the very worst sort of flirt, too. You flirt with religions, with traditions, with politics, with everything that is most sacred and important. You flirt with the Church, with the Middle Ages, with the marriage question, with the Jewish question, even with the hideous cult of gluttony and drunkenness. Every one of your discussions of these questions is like a flirtation with a worthless woman . . . behind all your sincere admiration of her priceless pearls and her pretty paint you loathe the creature's flesh and blood . . ."

It is inevitable that even the scraps and shavings of a life dedicated to intellectual amusement should contain a few pungent bits.

Cricket Love Song

IF you have travelled along any of the state highways which pass through New England's swampy or watered spots, you have very likely heard the cheering song of the tiny cricket.

The cricket does not make the fascinating music with his mouth as most people suppose, but with his wings. On the lower edge of each forewing are a number of little ridges which form a sort of file or rasp, and on the inner margin of the wing is a hardened scraping surface.

When the little cricket wishes to chirrup, he merely rubs the file of one wing over the scraping surface of the other, which puts the wing membranes in vibration and thus produces the sound.

Only the male species are equipped with these organs, and the sounds are for the purpose of calling the mute females.

And the next time you pass by a spot where these little fellows are whistling you will then realize that Joe Cricket has come home from work to find the supper table bare, and is merely calling his wife from the back fence to come get him something to eat. Wouldn't it be lovely if we men could solve our problems as nicely as the cricket does his?

Lawrence J. Quinn.

Says ALDOUS HUXLEY

LONDON.—We complain when we are sick, are surprised and dismayed by any manifestation of social disorder. But the really astonishing fact is that we are ever well and that society ever enjoys a day of tranquil existence. Our bodies are so fantastically complicated that the odds against their functioning correctly are enormous. Still greater are the odds against social stability. For a society (particularly a huge industrialized society of the modern type) is to a great extent an artificial affair and, alas, we all know that even the best of man-made machines are horribly unreliable by comparison with the living mechanisms of Nature.

Modern social arrangements are working badly enough, heaven knows, but the remarkable thing is that they should work as well as they do. Hold-ups, riots, head-crackings—the papers are full of such unpleasant items. But still the light goes on when we press the switch, the buses run, we can walk in the street unarmed and without serious risk of being killed. The fact of so much social stability and quiet in the midst of so much confusion is even more extraordinary, it seems to me, than the analogous fact of bodily health in an environment full of potential reasons for being sick.

MAN has been called a tool-making animal, but he is also (and this, so far as society is concerned, is the more significant characteristic) a rule-making animal. He is the inventor of chess and military drill, of football and the sonnet, of higher mathematics and bridge—in a word, of the game with rules. He loves rules for their own sake, because the performance of actions in accordance with rules is a source in itself of profound satisfaction. The knowledge that such observance of the rules is often good policy may strengthen man's love of rules for their own sake. But it is obvious that this love can exist apart from all considerations of self-interest.

If society is as stable as it is, that is because most human beings are, so to say, born bridge-players and congenital footballers. Force and the appeal to self-interest reinforce the native love of rules for their own sake; but they are certainly not strong enough by themselves to ensure the stability of society. The truth of this is clearly illustrated by cases where individuals stubbornly refuse to abide by the accepted rules of the social game. If they are sufficiently clever and ruthless these rule-ignorers can inflict mischief that is out of all proportion to their numbers.

WE have seen, in America, the difficulties experienced by the police in dealing with bandits like Dillinger. If the number of such determined criminals were suddenly doubled the existing forces of public order would be utterly inadequate.

Luckily, very few people are like Dillinger. Nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand men and women are born bridge-players who accept the rules even when it is not to their advantage to do so, and actually seem to take a certain pleasure in abiding by them. That is why we can get on with so few policemen. And that is why, in spite of the enormous sum of incompetence, iniquity and consequent suffering, revolutions have been so astonishingly rare.

Soda Fountain

THE soda man knows all the tales of woe
Within his block. Rich women tell him when
They have lost their dogs or lost their husbands.
He sympathizes equally in each
Sad case and serves them chocolate malted, with
The smile they do not pay for, but for which
They have walked three blocks and shivered as they walked,
Seeing in these boys' eyes the eager, old,
Quick admiration, never dreaming it
Is made to order. Drowsily they sit
Here at the soda fountain, the one
Kind heaven that shelters them each day from harm,
Their heaven, their sure reward for the sharp, small
And constant hurts that life deals to us all.

Mary Carolyn Davies.

BRITISH BARMAIDS

By BEN RAY REDMAN

VENTURING out into the night life of Manhattan the other evening I was interested and disappointed to note that the drinking habits of Americans had suffered no sudden and magical transformation as a result of Prohibition's end. Not, at least, in the restaurant in which I found myself. The back room, containing the bar, was rowdy with song and shouting and at the bar itself people were being served who obviously should have been refused service several drinks earlier.

Mournfully I viewed the scene. But perhaps I had been hoping for too much. After all, no nation can be raised immediately from a state of barbarism to one of civilization by a simple alteration of law; and there is no doubt that American drinking under the Volstead dispensation was barbarism naked and unashamed. Time will work wonders I assured myself.

AND then abruptly my companion, whose thoughts were following my own, murmured: "I have the solution. British barmaids!" And in a flash I saw the vision. British barmaids, not as single spies, but in battalions; British barmaids in regiments, a hundred thousand strong if necessary, crossing the Atlantic to further the cause of sobriety and sane drinking in America. What a picture on which to speculate! What possibilities!

Consider for a moment, I beg of you, the nature of that ancient and honorable institution, the British barmaid. In fiction or on the stage she may be a pretty flibberty-gibbet of dubious morals, the willing plaything of the lads of the village, or the calculating seductress of Lord Devoncorn's susceptible son.

But not in real life. Ah, no! In real life she almost invariably runs true to one of two established types. Either she is lean and hatchet-faced, or billowy and motherly; and in each case her respectability is unimpeachable, and her insistence upon the proprieties firmer than that of any peeress.

Standing behind her polished bar serene in her black bombazine, measuring her drinks by the thimbleful, she is a solid pillar of middle class morality. Be her manner maternal or spinsterish, it is equally devastating to crapulous glee. One does not get determinedly and comfortably tight in the presence of one's mother or under the disapproving stare of one's maiden aunt. There is no joy in it. And the British barmaid is the symbol of all the dissuasive mothers and all the disapproving maiden aunts in Christendom. As the living scourge of alcoholic gaiety she is more terrible than an army with banners.

WHAT a power she would prove in these United States! I can see strong men, ten-cocktail-men, wilting beneath her gaze and requesting a mere second cocktail with bowed trepidation. I can see stout teamsters yielding to her sway, taxi drivers weeping soberly into their beer, and men-about-town abashed before her. I can feel the chilling blast of that icy glance wherewith she would discourage pretty ladies from the thought of just one more side car. Or I can hear her cajoling, motherly voice declaring: "That'll be all for tonight lads. You don't need nothing more now do you? Be good chaps and please your old Rosie and cut along 'ome."

Gentlemen, I propose a toast. I give you the barmaids of Britain!

Reality

FOR the half-schooled and the wise, there is no change but only growth ..there is no ready key opening into a newer world and strange
Yet the steady cycle of reality may make old apple boughs a fresher green, may turn and lift the fallow loam to black richer than before—for those who've seen that seasons have a way of coming back!

THE Writer writes for art alone
Without a thought of payment
(Except enough so he may own
A car, a house of brick or stone,
A radio, a gramophone,
Food, furniture and raiment).

HE only writes when he is fired
By the Divine Afflatus
(Or by the job for which he's hired,
Or when his temperament's inspired
By some improvement that's desired
In his financial status).

THE Writer, novelist or bard—
Boasts of his painful toiling,
And how he sweats for his reward
(The truth is, speaking by the card,
He doesn't work so very hard
To keep the kettle boiling).

THE Writer writes, and having writ
His poem, novel, play or skit.
Cares not who may decry it (Except to throw a raging fit
If critics do not care for it
Or people do not buy it!)

Cheery Telephone Operators Get on the Nerves

Of BRUNO LESSING

NEW YORK.—If what I write in this and the next few articles seems incoherent disjointed and a bit squinty if you get what I mean—I [illegible] I'm on a hurry-up trip from Rome to California. It's a matter of business and business always upsets me. I'm incoherent, disjointed and more than a bit squinty myself. The rush-around. Seeing people whom I had to see and not being able to see many whom I wanted to see.

Listen. I'll tell you the worst. I came to my hotel apartment last night, weary and dispirited. I had my key in my hand as I walked down the corridor. I noticed a push-button beside the door and I pushed it. Some instinct inherited from my antediluvian ancestors impels me to push a push-button every time I see one. I heard the buzz on the other side. And I wondered why in the devil no one opened the door. Then it dawned on me that I was alone in this apartment. And if that isn't coo coo I don't know what is.

RODE through Central Park, New York's famous breathing-space. After the Pincio Gardens of Rome, Hyde Park in London and the Bois de Boulogne in Paris it looks rather moth-eaten. Dinky and blah. Not enough tree or woodland atmosphere. Not enough children playing on the grass and not enough grass for children to play on. I suppose it's largely a matter of climate and that it would cost a lot of money to fill it with luxuriant vegetation. Too bad. Good parks are a bulwark against Bolshevism.

And yet I learned that the park commissioner is an able official. Thoroughly democratic. Alas! It takes more than democracy to make palm and mimosa trees flourish in New York.

TELEPHONE service always delights me in U. S. after a long sojourn in Europe. It's bad in Italy and awful in France. There's one institution here, however, that gets on my nerves. And that's the over-polite operator who is instructed by her boss to greet every caller with a glad voice and a perfunctory salutation. There's one chap, an official in a big office with half a dozen telephone operators, whom I have to call up frequently. Each time I am greeted with a melodious "GOOD morning!" or "GOOD afternoon!" Followed by "What can I do for you?" I think it's a lot of bolony.

Anyway, today I said to the girl, "Why do you emphasize the 'GOOD' in your musical greeting? I see nothing good in this particular morning. It's raining and it's chilly. I've got a headache. The only reason I got out of bed was to telephone to your boss. As to what you can do for me—send me a steamship ticket or a quart of 1614 Roederer Brut or come up here and sew on some buttons for me. In the meantime please let me talk to your boss."

The funniest part of it is that my friend says she asked him what I was like. If she only knew!

THE jolts you get! Met a nice fellow in Switzerland two years ago and promised to call him up the next time I came to New York. When I was here last year I forgot about it. Today I remembered it. Learned that he had died a couple of months ago.

Which reminds me of two experiences last year. I looked up a man who used to own one of the best restaurants in New York. Found him working as head waiter in a cheap restaurant. Looked up another chap who once begged me to find him a job. Got as far as his private secretary, who asked me if I had an appointment. He had sold America short.

Have come to the conclusion that life is queer. Maybe, one of these days, I'll suggest an improvement. The only one that I can think of at the moment is a hogshead of Pilsner.

A CHAT with Walter Howie, of the Hearst organization. The last time I saw him was in Rome. He was genial and relaxed then and it was a pleasure to talk with him. Now, contaminated by the New York atmosphere, he is a demon—all work, hurry-up, hullabaloo, efficiency, economy and all that sort of junk.

"Here's an idea for you, Bruno," says he. "Write about Europe in New York. Go to the Italian, French, Spanish, Russian, Greek and other colonies in this metropolis and compare them with their native background."

Can you beat it? I'm aching to get out of New York and see trees and green fields and flowers and he suggests work. Hard work, too. One of the reasons I was glad to take this trip across the ocean was to get away from those backgrounds for a while. What a friend!

LIPSTICKS

THE American Society of Beauty Culturists strongly urged the employment of the lipstick to combat the economic depression. They recommended that American women paint their lips with a slight upturn at each end. This would create the illusion of a permanent smile, thereby fostering optimism and eventually bringing about a return of prosperity.

While some may question that use of the lipstick there is no doubt of its value in another field—in the treatment of insanity in women. The heads of many insane asylums testify as to the magic action of cosmetics in calming the mental turbulence of their women patients. Newer institutions, like the Psychopathic Hospital at Galveston, Texas, actually have completely equipped beauty parlors.

I GOT RHYTHM

Days can be sunny
With nev-er a sigh,
Don't need what mon-ey can buy,
Birds in the tree sing
Their day-ful song,
Why should-n't we sing a-long?—
I'm chipper all the day,
Hap-py with my lot.
How do I get that way?
Look at what I've got.
(Refrain with abandon)
I—got rhy-thm,—
I—got music—
I—got my man
Who could ask for an-y-thing more?
I—got dai-sies—
In—green pas-tures,
I—got my man
Who could ask for an-y-thing more?
Old—Man Trouble,—
I—don't mind him,
You—won't find him
'Round my door
I—got star-light,
I—got sweet dreams,
I—got my man
Who could ask for an-y-thing more,
Who could ask for anything more?

DOWLING'S DOLE CHOICE IS SCORED

This Is Life
ROBERT E. ROGERS

The prophecies of the cognoscenti at Alfred P. Sloan, Jr.'s, dinner at the opening of the second year of the Century of Progress were very interesting, although more or less of the sort that we are accustomed to. They did, however, bear out the idea that the exposition of this summer is primarily to celebrate the century of progress to come, rather than the century which transformed Fort Dearborn to the present metropolis.

Robert E. Rogers

These prophecies are proof that mankind believes that his control over the existing world is virtually limitless, although scientists are sure to be more dubious than the laymen of the probability of quick results and cheap applications. In television for instance, no radio expert whose views I have ever read has shared the dreams of the layman.

Some of these prophecies are fundamental, such as the lengthening of the average man's span of life to 70 years (it was only 35 in the Renaissance) and the elimination of infectious diseases. Both these results are indicated by past history. The Mayo Brothers, however, did not seem to remember that increase of years will probably go hand in hand with a falling birth rate, which means that within another century we may have a predominantly elderly population interested in the things elderly people are interested in. That might have some effect on the theory of progress.

Radio power is just another step. Electric motors run by sunlight will not become a practical question until necessity drives—and we are far from that yet.

The pre-fabricated house is already the subject of intensive research. Professor Tucker of the building construction course at Technology is working at the problem. Edison's dream of a poured concrete house—such as Milton fancied before him in "Paradise Lost"—came to nothing. The fabricated house, too, will be an economic problem rather than a technical one. Man can do about what he wishes with the physical world, not with men's wishes and habits and inertia.

A radio that will print for you on tape everything that goes through the air may be a possibility, but certainly a most unpleasant one. As an offset to that we shall probably have newspapers that talk to you, sing to you, even. I can do without both these novelties.

The trans oceanic airplane passenger service will come, of course, but only after some fearful tragedies. No matter how much progress we may make in conquering nature, she will always retain the whip hand.

I'd like the colored stereoscopic movies. I cannot get enough of color on the screen, yet we are given it so seldom. The final scene of "The House of Rothschild," for instance, made history live again. Aldous Huxley in "Brave New World," predicts the "Feelies," adding a third sense to pictures. But we can probably run along without that.

Presumably these scientific and technical experts knew what they are talking about. There is nothing inherently improbable in their visions. When an undergraduate at Technology can invent a robot which behaves like a human being with conditioned reflexes, when an electrician can reproduce in the laboratory many times the power of the lightning bolt, it is not for a mere literary man to say that any dealings with the physical world are improbable, however dubious their effects on mankind may be.

But none of the diners, so far as I can find out, were able to answer Mr. Sloan's basic question: "Is there any foundation for the belief of pessimists that progress has ceased and life must be maintained by dividing up available jobs and accepting a lower standard of living?"

No one answered that. No one can answer it. In that sense "progress" rests upon an entirely different set of assumptions than the possibilities of technical invention. New inventions may either multiply jobs or lessen them. The answer to the question will depend on whether the approach to the problems raised by technical progress shall be statesmanlike and practical or opportunistic and dogmatic. A declining economic system may cut off scientific progress at the very roots. A system which tries to eliminate the profit motive, the urge of competitive individualism, may do the same.

The one suggestion that bore on the problem was uttered by Genn Frank, president of the University of Wisconsin. College curricula, he said, must be revised as insurance against social disaster by teaching future generations to govern the effects of technical discoveries.

When, as, and if!

Presumably by closeted research workers in sociology. Meanwhile the outside world is busy on its own hook negating their theories. Theories are static. Life is constantly inventive. Is man promethean enough to school himself successfully for the future on the basis of past achievements and failures? Dubious! Is the social will capable of being guided by reason? Again, dubious.

To quote G. K. Chesterton. "But the common people waited until all the scientists and prophets were dead, and buried them nicely, and then they proceeded to do as they pleased."

It is just that quality in people that both the sociologists and the workers in exact science are sometimes prone to forget.

6 Pedestrians Hurt

Six of the nine persons killed last week in auto acidents were pedestrians, according to the weekly report of Registrar of Motor Vehicles Morgan T. Ryan. The Registrar criticised auto drivers who race home at high speed after wild parties.

CUTLER DEFIES DEATH NOTE IN CRIME PROBE

"Quit or You Will Be Rubbed Out!" Is Phone Threat

With the police unification bill scheduled to come before the Senate today, Roger W. Cutler, secretary of the citizen's committee for public safety, which sponsored the measure, was insistent that threats against his life would not deter him in his activities for the plan.

Cutler admitted that he had been the object of an attempt at intimidation and that the threat had been made over the telephone.

"KEEP OUT" IS MESSAGE

"Keep out of this and mind your own business or you will be rubbed out," was the gist of the threat, he said.

While proponents of the measure were preparing for the battle in the Senate today, Commissioner of Public Safety Daniel Needham, who attended a two-day conference of state police heads in New Jersey, returned to announce a plan by which 12 states will interlock police systems in the battle against crime.

In commenting on the threat he had received, Cutler said today:

"I don't mind being threatened. I'm not going to pay any attention to it. I'm only a small cog in the organization anyway. But it does mean a difference to me if the police bill doesn't go through."

Cutler then discussed the list of 21 public enemies which he had compiled and turned over to Governor Ely. He declared that as soon as the police bill was passed he would publish this list as well as the records of the men listed.

He also declared he would not ask for protection or the placing of guards about his home by Boston or State police.

It was also revealed that the list of public enemies has created a breach between Governor Ely and Police Commissioner Hultman.

At his home in Duxbury, Commissioner Hultman stated that he did not know the names on the public enemy list and declared that the governor had not sent him a copy.

Governor Ely was reached at his Westfield home and when told of Commissioner Hultman's statement said.

NEEDHAM OUTLINES PLAN

"Hultman knows the names. No official message from me is necessary. He's the police commissioner. He could get to work on this matter if he wanted to."

The plan outlined by General Needham on his return from New Jersey would make it practically impossible for criminals to escape to another State after committing a crime. Improvement in radio and teletype communication would cause State police to mass on the borders of every state within a short time after a crime was committed.

CRASH DRIVER IS SOUGHT

Warren H. Churchill, of Parsons street, West Newton, was being sought for questioning by police today in a triple crash in Newtonville square in which his auto was involved. Two men, occupants of the Churchill machine, leaped from the car and fled after the crash.

Mrs. Lillian McManus, of Rogers park, Brighton, occupant of one auto in the crash, suffered severe lacerations of the head. No one else was hurt.

Father Carty Is Gaining Rapidly

Rev. Fr. John W. Carty, curate at St. Cecelia's Church, in Back Bay, who suffered a fractured skull and a broken nose when his auto struck a pole at Main street and Brooks park, in Medford, Friday, is reported to be gaining rapidly.

Yesterday he was removed from Lawrence Memorial Hospital to the Baker Memorial Hospital, Boston, where he will be nearer his parish and his home at Jamaica Plain. An operation probably will be performed on the skull fracture later this week.

The Somerville Lions Club will tender a reception and banquet to Judge Emil Fuchs at the Y. M. C. A. Building, Highland avenue, Somervill tomorrow evening. United States Marshal John J. Murphy and Harold Ryan have aranged a brilliant program.

Memorial Mass for Irish Knights

Solemn high mass of requiem will be sung. Daniel J. Flanagan is chairman of the memorial mass committee.

'HE IS UNFIT!' SELVITELLA CHARGES

Watch, Ward Training Teaches No Sympathy, Declares Councillor

City Councillor Henry Selvitella of East Boston called upon Mayor Mansfield and welfare overseers today to abandon their plans to name John C. L. Dowling new executive director of the welfare department.

Dowling [illegible] both by temperament [illegible] ing C[illegible] Working with the mayor, whose "hard-boiled attitude" [illegible] Dowling would [illegible] ship [illegible] on welfare [illegible] charged.

Selvitella framed [illegible] in letters to Mayor M[illegible] and to each overseer [illegible] came in the midst of plans to reorganize the welfare department completely, the first step of which was to be the naming of Dowling to succeed W[illegible]

MUST BE SYMPATHETIC

"The position of executive director calls for the services of a man of sympathetic understanding," Selvitella's letters said. "He must be a man who can visualize the sufferings of those who are compelled to apply for public aid.

"Dowling is not such a man. His entire life has been devoted to destructive rather than constructive enterprises. His work as president of the Watch and Ward Society does not qualify his to preside over the destinies of more than 100,000 men, women and children who are dependent upon municipal charity for a bare existence.

"In that position he dealt with moral lepers. Our welfare citizens are not of that type.

MAYOR 'HARD-BOILED'

"Dowling is temperamentally unfitted to deal with these people.

"With Dowling working with Mayor Mansfield, whose hard-boiled attitude towrads small-salaried city employes has aroused even the enmity of his campaign supporters, welfare recipients would be faced with greater hardships than the past sad three years hve brought them."

Selvitella said that he did not doubt that there was fraud in some welfare cases, bue even Mayor Mansfield himself admitted it was only among about 3 per cent of those receiving aid. He urged that overseers take no cation today but give more deliberate attention to selection of the man to head the welfare department.

McCARTHY STEPS OUT

The way for Dowling's appointment was paved by McCarthy's acceptance of Mayor Mansfield's invitation to become deputy commissioner in charge of the child welfare division of the institutions department.

Hollywood was qui vive over Will Rogers' first try at a legitimate stage role in "A Wilderness." He medicined himself against a flop. He would, in that eventuality, close the show with a plea "the star suffered nervous fatigue." Anyone as jumpy as Bill is entitled to a fit of fatigue any time, any place in any language. But as it turned out, his version of the George Cohan part is a smash, an achievement that pleased Rogers more than any other in his varied career. He is like a boy with a new red top.

As the French have it: "The more it changes, the more it is the same thing." An evening seven years ago this month I dropped into a familiar haunt in Paris having arrived by boat train a few hours earlier. At a table, ringed by many glasses, in a corner sat Floyd Gibbons, Basil Woon, Hank Wales and Jed Kiley. About the same hour last evening in this part of the world I dropped into another familiar haunt and at a table in a corner sat Basil Woon, Hank Wales and Jed Kiley. Only Gibbons was missing. So we sent a telegraphic round robin-bob-bob-bobbin to him.

The English hunt breakfast is a popular Sunday diversion. I missed Miriam Hopkins' yesterday by late sleeping. She has Myron Selznick's villa in a Beverly arroyo, a morning-gloried dell that suggests hoop-skirts, black mammies and pot likker. Studio folk, used to early rising, arrive on time, all merry and bright. Another sun-up arrival is the Breakfast club, in its 12th year, which at 8 a. m. has entertained all the visiting firemen of headline calibre. It is a Rotarian rigamarole of songs, gestures and funny sayings, but is different and good fun. At least once.

Sleuth-to-the-dastard melodrama Chris Morley once so popularized in Hoboken has taken firm root here. "The Drunkard," also opened in New York, is in its second year here with no indication of folding. It has all the whispering asides of the ten-twent-thirt. And movie folk go for a lark and to drink the free beer. Irvin Cobb has been five times. Jesse Laskey and Hal Roach go every week.

PICNIC BASKET IN SUMMER REVIVAL -:- CONTRAST SPICES SPRING FROCKS

Given in Marriage

—By Adele Garrison—

Hugh Grantland's tender solicitude, coupled with the thought of Dicky and the girl "Floss", bring Madge dangerously close to collapse.

Chapter 49

AT THE sound of Hugh Grantland's ardent, sympathetic whisper, pleading to know what it was that troubled me and how he could help me, I swayed toward him almost imperceptibly, then straightened myself stiffly in my chair as I realized how dangerous a thing it was for me to let down, by ever so little, the barrier I always kept between this old friend and me.

"There is nothing the matter," I said lamely, and was glad indeed to hear Mrs. Ticer's voice in the hall outside as she came back from the telephone.

"We will talk about it later," he said, with decisive finality, and then he rose and drew forward a chair for Mrs. Ticer with the same deliberate deferential courtesy he would have used to the first lady of the land.

But my neighbor shook her head decisively as she thanked him.

"I can't stay a minute," she said. "I've got to get down to the harbor, right away. But don't you hurry your telephoning, Mis' Graham. I'll start walking down, and ten to one I'll have a lift before I'm fairly out of the gate. I know pretty nearly everybody in this neck of the woods."

MRS. TICER DEPARTS

She laughed jovially, and Hugh smiled down at her, even as he touched a bell which brought a Chinese servant to the door.

"Tell John to bring the car around," he commanded, and then he turned back to Mrs. Ticer.

"Just tell John where you want to go, and he will wait for you until you have finished your errands and bring you back here. I hope we can persuade Mrs. Graham to stay and wait for you."

"Oh, no!" I protested. "I must get back home as soon as I have telephoned."

"I guess they can do without you over there for a minute or two," Mrs. Ticer said, with the freedom of her long association with me. "I won't be more than five minutes at that errand. I don't like to have you driving around alone with that foot, I'll tell you that."

I saw a seconding protest in Hugh's eyes, and was afraid that he might voice it too earnestly and warmly for Mrs. Ticer's ears. Discretion was distinctly the better part of valor, I decided upon this occasion, and immediately acted upon my opinion.

IN HUGH'S ARMS

"I can't fly in the face of such care as that," I told her smiling, "although I really am able to walk home, instead of driving, if it were necessary. But I will stay here until you return."

"That's a load off my mind," Mrs. Ticer observed, as the houseman came back with the announcement that the car was at the door. With an excuse to me, Hugh escorted Mrs. Ticer to the door, and I knew, put her in the car impressively.

When he came back I was upon my feet, stick in hand, ready to go to the telephone.

"What are you doing?" he demanded fiercely, as he rushed up to me and put a supporting hand beneath my elbow. I let myself relax gratefully in that steady clasp, for he is so tall and strong that leaning upon his arm is like resting against a rock, and swung my cane lightly.

"Thank you! How strong you are!" I said gratefully.

"Give me that thing!" he said and reaching across me, took the cane from my hand and tossed it upon a couch.

"You cannot know how seeing you with that thing makes me feel," he said. "You were always so full of life and joy, to be tied down to a stick! At least while you are in my house you shall not use it. I can spare myself the sight of it, and you the use of it, that long, unless"—with quick concern—"I am fatuous to a degree. Perhaps you prefer the stick?"

"Indeed, I do not," I told him quickly, and truthfully. "It is much nicer this way, really."

"Thank you." He made the words almost solemn, and his hand clasped my arm more tightly. I found that I made far better progress with him than with the support of the cane, and I was infinitely more comfortable.

The servants were not in evidence as we walked down the hall to the telephone, and I wondered if he had sent them to some other part of the house. Neither was Lee Chow to be seen, and when Hugh had seated me comfortably before the telephone, I inquired for the high born Chinese, of whom secretly I stood in some such fear.

HOW TO EXPLAIN?

"He will be down before you go," he said. "I have sent word to him that you are here, because he has spoken of you so often lately, and has been so regretful that he did not see you when he called."

Again that queer little feeling of unreasoning fear rolled over me, but I put it steadily away from me.

"I shall be very glad to see him," I said, pumping up courage for the sturdy utterance from somewhere deep within me.

"I thank you for him," he returned, smiling. "And now, can I get your number, or would you rather I left you by yourself?"

"Oh no. Don't go!" I protested, then stopped, with the color flaming in my face as I remembered that Philip Veritzen, whom I wished to telephone, was Hugh Grantland's pet detestation.

Campfire Will Lure Many Cooks

By Martha Lee

From Martha Lee's Monday Morning Broadcast Over Station WAAB

THE ARRIVAL of warm spring days is luring us once more into the cool green byways and a picnic basket comes into its own again. This first holiday of the season generally is a very hot day and you will probably want to plan a picnic.

Styles for picnics are changing from the days when hours were spent in their preparation and the menu made up of foods which are never eaten at home. Today the food on a picnic is the same as that served at home. The modern picnicker has a basket all ready to start on a moment's notice. It contains a bottle opener, can opener, good sharp knife, salt, pepper, sugar, butter container and a picnic cloth. Simply gather up the food necessary and start off.

The picnic in which food is cooked over an open fire is becoming more and more poular and we have seen some very ingenious little devices for roasting weenies and that very popular meat—hamburg. We shall be very glad to give you more information about them. They make quick easy work of the picnic and cost around 15c.

Take along the coffee pot also. Coffee never tates better than when made in an old fashioned coffee pot over an open fire, don't you think? Measure out the coffee before you leave home. Tie into an old cheese cloth or sugar bag. Be sure to allow room for swelling of the grounds. Fill the pot with cold water and add the coffee, bring to boiling point and you will find you have a delicious cup of coffee. Be sure to have the string around the coffee bag long enough so that it can be removed easily without burning the fingers.

If you have need of a grill on your picnic, there are also very simple and inexpensive ones on the market. Or take along the rack from your broiler, and set it up on stones over your campfire.

Have you ever served Kabobs? They are very popular for picnics and are made by cutting lean beef or lamb in 1½ inch cubes and slices of bacon in squares. Arrange alternate pieces of the meat and bacon, and onion rings on long pointed sticks or forks and broil over the fire. Serve between buttered rolls.

If you are taking sandwiches to the picnic, they should be wrapped individually, a napkin wrung from cold water wrapped around the whole. Or a much simpler idea is to take the loaves of bread, at least two different kinds, and at least two different fillings in screw top jars and let everyone make his own. In this way the picnicker is not only getting what he wants, but the sandwiches will be fresh when served and you will have no leftovers to take home. However, if you do have any left-over sandwiches, toast them rather than serve them dried out and unappetizing.

If you are taking salads on your picnic, the ingredients should be carried separately and combined on the spot. The lettuce chilled in damp cloth and wax paper. Celery also. Cucumbers and tomatoes should be marinated in French dressing, drained and then wrapped for the picnic, and combined on the spot.

For Your Terrace

BOXWOOD, in a sheltered position is excellent to bound a terrace. The Japanese holly, somewhat similar in appearance is also good and is a bit hardier. Yews are best for the exposed positions and like boxwood and holly, thrive equally well in sun or shade.

Summer Is Open Season For Budgets

The laced shoulders and the high patch pockets jack up this swell, classic two piece white crepe sports costume. Lacings and belt are lipstick red.

Chartreuse chiffon is used for this very cool summer formal frock which has a fluttery ruffle bustle jabot on its graceful skirt. The pinches that drape the shoulder wings are a new idea. The front decolletage hits a nice hot weather low.

By PRUNELLA WOOD

THE CANNY budgeteer knows the value of having a lot of moderate priced dresses in her closet to see her through the hot months. There is nothing more disheartening than having to "get the good" out of a couple of extravagant dresses, when one's humid soul longs for a flock of crisp, fresh duds, ready to the hand. Having your "other" dress at the cleaners is enough to break a heart.

One darkish silk crepe for the street is indispensable, but one may alternate it with light spectator sports frock quite comfortably, and the hegiras for country week-ends are undertaken more easily than if one stocked up with a lot of dark clothes and one snappy light outfit. In between these two types of comfortable summer frocks is the model of washable silk which is checked or striped with bright color on a white ground. Tailored models are good, made of silk seersucker, printed foulard, or string.

Cotton dresses and suits look prettier and more sophisticated this summer than ever before. Perfectly good models come for the price of a theatre ticket, models which will tub and tub, and still stay shapely.

Dimity, linen both thin and thick, gingham, printed voile, seersucker and shirting materials are all to be had in trig tailored outfits, while dotted Swiss and embroidered muslin come in models that are quite festive enough to go to tea or the afternoon bridge circle.

Slam Whenever Possible

By Josephine Culbertson

Helping the Opponents

While it is a sound general principle to erect, if possible a bidding defense against an adverse game or Slam when the partnership at the Bridge table is convinced that an effective playing defense cannot be found there are many occasions when the defense bidding is of great benefit to the opposing pair in reaching the correct contract.

An interesting example of this occurred in a recent Duplicate game in New York city, in which only Mr. Alfred P. Sheinwold and his partner reached and made a Small Slam. Mr. Sheinwold, in giving me the hand, remarked that his opponents had helped a little by their psychic Overcalls, which gave him and his partner opportunities for cue bidding in their suits. The hand was:

North, Dealer

North:
♠ K 6
♡ A 4
◇ A 10 4 3
♣ K J 10 7 6

West:

◇ K J 9 8 7 6 5 2

South:
♠ A J 10 7 3

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	1 ♠	2 ♠	3 ♡
4 ♡	4 ♠	5 ♣	Pass
6 ♣	Pass	Pass	Pass

Of course, East's one-spade Overcall was sheer folly. His justification to himself was based on the fact that he held an eight-card escape suit, but inasmuch as it was of lower rank than the spades, he must have trembled somewhat as to the possible outcome in case his partner had support for the spades and some real strength in his hand. The spade bid gave to South, who had very strong support for his partner's Opening bid, the opportunity for an Immediate Overcall in that suit. West's bid of three hearts likewise gave to North an opportunity to show control of the first round; his heart Overcall was justified because his own short holding in spades made it fairly obvious that South's Overcall in the spade suit disclosed an Ace and not a void in the suit, and thus indicated that the King of spades was of real value. When East again bid spades, his purpose of course was to further confuse the issue. He planned doubled to bid five diamonds, but before he had an opportunity to do this North and South had reached a Small Slam contract in clubs.

Luncheon for Bride-to-Be

By MRS. BEECKMAN

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

Is it proper for the sister of the bride-to-be to give a shower in her honor if she (the sister) is to be the maid of honor at the wedding? If it is not proper, what other affair could she give?

It's usually taken for granted that the close relatives of the bride-to-be or of the groom-to-be do not give the showers for the bride-to-be. It's apparent that this sponsoring of showers by such close relatives gives too much the impression that the party is a "promotion." However, this is for the hostess to decide for herself. In better taste is a luncheon or tea planned for the bride-to-be. Or, if the men are to be invited too, the party may be a dinner or a supper.

Pandora Tells You

DEAR PANDORA:

A woman friend of mine is always worrying over something. It's true that her husband's salary was cut several times in the past two years but haven't all God's children had salary cuts and weren't they lucky to have the salaries to cut?

The other day she burst into my house all of a dither because she had discovered it practically impossible—to match shoes and handbag to the unusual shade of blue of her new spring suit. It all made me a little weary particularly since my husband has just received notice that his services will no longer be required after the first of June.

I mention these two incidents, Pandora, because I think worry has become the great American disease although the medics never deign to mention it in the company of heart disease, cancer, tuberculosis and those other dread enemies of man. I'll wager if a survey were made it would be found that worry tops them all. And why I'm going on this way, Pandora, is to ask you, woman to woman, how one can combat worry. This woman friend of mine is, of course, an obvious example of permitting worry over trifles to ruin her life. I, on the other hand, have some reason to be concerned over the future.

MRS. ANNIE J., DEDHAM.

DEAR MRS. ANNIE J:

The wisest man I've ever known used to tell me that fighting worry was the way to indelibly impress it on the mind. He advised playing a trick on worry. His formula was to crowd worry out of your mind by immediately beginning to think of something which interests you deeply and charms you intensely. Sounds hard? It is at first but you'll be amazed how quickly you will become proficient in playing this game. PANDORA.

Sheer Fabrics Over Prints Are Smart

By Annice Brink

JUST AS it's the seasoning that makes the soup, the cheese that makes the lowly cracker, and spice that makes life, contrasts of prints and fabrics will make your summer wardrobe the kind that cannot possibly bring on the "haven't a thing to wear" blues.

Even if printed evening gowns never meant a thing in your young life before, we defy you to resist a Laurencin, or fruit and flower, or polka dot print glimmering through a gauzy coat of solid color, glamorous fabric like marquisette. Yes, the marquisette which has adorned windows beautifully for so many long and unsung years.

TRANSPARENT COATS

Marquisette has the right amount of stiffness combined with a flowing quality that has even more charm than net, the perennial glamour fabric. Done in a coat with tailored touches, long princess lines ending in a great flare, it gives a delightfully misty effect in flesh over a blue, coral and white print.

A black organdie evening coat with huge outstanding pagoda lines on the shoulders (who said bouffant shoulder effects were also-rans?), a tightly fitted trench coat waist and a flare that ends abruptly around the knees, puts a simple little coin-dotted evening gown into an alluring and gay Mardi Gras mood.

Cream tweed achieves more charm than its simplicity usually rates by having a giddy plaid blouse, outsize revers lined with the same plaid, and matching plaid gloves that wrinkle over the cuff, half way to the elbow.

Reversing the procedure of light trimming on dark, in deference to spring's penchant for delicate pastels, a pale blue crepe frock has a navy blue pleated frill collar flaring about the face and ending at the high, tailored belt. And navy blue linen gauntlet gloves mimic the collar frill with a small one encircling the cuffs.

GIRL IN THE FAMILY -:- A Choice Between Marriage for Love or Loyalty -:- By Beatrice Burton

SYNOPSIS

Lovely Susan Broderick lives in the old family mansion with her father Morris, brother John, Uncle Worthy, his wife Edna, and a spinster aunt, Lutie. Although they have lost their wealth the old folks live in a dream world of social prominence. They feel humiliated when it is necessary to take in a "paying guest." Susan is filled with pity for the stranger; she knows he will be ignored by her snobbish relatives. The family wonders what Susan's fiance, Wallace Steffen, young banker, will think. Susan is in favor of telling him the truth, but Aunt Edna frowns on this, saying, "If the man uses the side door, Wallace will never have to see him. Don't say anything, Susan, unless you have to." John, working his way through college, wants to give it up, and get a job on The Express. His father's heart is set on the boy becoming a lawyer. John does not like Wallace and warns Susan to be sure she really loves hiT before marrying. While Susan is waiting for Wallace, Mr. Sholes, the roomer, arrives. Susan like his smile and the twinkle in his eye. Uncle Worthy reprimands her for talking with Sholes. Wallace presents Susan with a diamond and sapphire ring. Later, Susan comes upon the jeweler's box, stamped with the name of a firm long out of business, indicating that the ring had been bought before she met Wallace. The Brodericks objected to Susan and John being friendly with their late mother's relatives, the Cullens, because they had no social standing. The Cullen home was like the family itself—cheerful, friendly and large. Uncle Arthur Cullen owns a grocery store.

CHAPTER X

Years ago, long before Susan's time, Uncle Arthur had owned another grocery store, a smaller one; and it was there that Susan's father had met her mother. Her uncle had told her about it a great many times. It had happened on a June day in 1906 when Janet Cullen had been going over the books of the store, and Morris Broderick had stepped in to buy some tobacco.

"Janet used to come down to the store one a month to make out bills for me, and straighten out my bookkeeping," Uncle Arthur had told her. "She was quick as lightning at figures, and I never was any good at them. Well, along the street came a little electric runabout, your father sitting in it with a little black mustache on his lip and a colored band around his hat—"

It never seemed quite real to Susan, somehow. She could not imagine her father wearing a mustache or being in love with anyone except Mrs. Ada Hopper. The whole thing was like a story to her.

USUALLY AT HOME

Howard was in front of the store, lifting baskets of groceries into his father's delivery truck when Susan came around the corner of Mills rd. on Saturday afternoon. The Cullens all worked, and he helped at the store every afternoon after school and all day on Saturday. A white butcher's apron was tied over his clothes and his face was red with cold.

"See you at supper, Susie!" he called to her, getting up into the seat of the truck. "The girls are at home."

The Cullen girls were usually at home on Saturday, after their workaday week, and Susan had fallen into the habit of coming there every Saturday afternoon and staying for the evening meal which the Cullens all called "supper."

They were the kind of people who always asked their friends to take pot luck with them, and if pot luck happened to be hash or stew, they did not apologize for it and they were not embarrassed in the least.

Susan opened the front door and walked into the house without knocking or ringing the door bell. No one who knew the Cullens ever rang and then waited to be admitted. If you were a friend of theirs you simply walked in, looked around and, if no one was in sight, called out, "Hello! Anybody at home?"

This was what Susan did now as she took off her wraps in the white paneled hallway. She could hear voices upstairs and she started up. "All right for me to come up?" she called.

Footsteps came along the upper hall and Mary Cullen appeared at the head of the stairs. "It's Susie Broderick!" she sang out to someone in the room she had just left, turning to look back over her shoulder. "Susie in person! Good show!"

Mary was the beauty of the Cullen family. Even now in a pongee smock, with her red hair in water wave combs and her face quite bare of make-up, she was more than pretty.

"We're having beauty shop," she said, showing Susan her nails, which had been covered with coral polish. "Look at those! Don't they look just like red jelly bean candy? —Susie, what's all the gossip we've been hearing about you? Connie says that John called her up this morning and told her that you're engaged to Wallace Steffen."

"THE CATCH-ALL"

The sitting room was called the Catch-All by the Cullens. It was a large bright room filled with a cheerful litter. There was a tennis racket on the wall above the open book shelves, and the top of the shelves was a sort of picture gallery—snapshots, for the most part, of the Cullens at home and abroad.

On the floor, in front of a fire of gas logs, sat Sara Cullen and Connie Sayre, who had lived with the family for several years. She and Mary worked together at the North side branch of the public library, and, although she paid her board at the Cullens'. Susan had never thought of her as their roomer or even as their "paying guest." She was like a member of the family.

"John did tell me that," she said when Susan came into the room. "Now, don't hold out on us, darling. It's true, isn't it?

"Did you pick it out, yourself?" Connie pulled the folds of her red flannel kimono around her and got up to examine the ring.

"No, I didn't."

"Well, all I have to say is that you're a bright girl, Susie," Mary said drily. "It takes real brains to land a husband these days. Especially a husband worth a diamond and two enormous sapphires!" The light from the gas logs woke a flame in her green eyes and turned her hair to copper as she glanced up at Susan.

RAT-TAT-TAT OF FEET

There was a sudden rat-tat-tat of feet on the stairs and Susan's Aunt Nell came into the room. "I thought I heard Susie's voice," she cried in a rich contralto with warm motherly tones in it. "Why didn't you girls tell me she was here?—How are you, Susie?" She was a short woman, plump but not overlarge, and although she was the sort of woman who is called an old-fashioned mother, there was nothing in the least old-fashioned about her appearance.

"Well, well, well! Will you just look at this!" she exclaimed when Susan showed her the ring. She made a clucking sound of admiration. "Did you ever see anything more magnificent in your life!—It's a little loose on your finger, isn't it, Susie? And it's so easy to lose a valuable thing like this. When are you going to bring your young man here to let me congratulate him?"

She spoke her mind about these things, but she did not nag. Instead, she kept the children under her eye, making the house a place where their friends could gather, sure of a welcome, sure of a good time, always.

ROOM IN THE BACK

The room that Mary and Sara shared was at the back of the house. Its three windows that looked out into the bare snow-encrusted branches of a maple tree were framed with pale green chintz curtains. On one side of the room, which was an unusually large one, stood Sara's three-quarter size bed, her dressing table and her pale green arm chair. There were books on a hanging shelf above the bed and on the wall above the dressing table was a single picture A snow scene done in black and white.

"Oh, very soon," Susan answered her. The one and only time she had brought Wallace to call on the Cullens still stood out in her memory as the longest and most painful evening of her life. He had been stiff and frankly bored with them and all of their works. With their jig-saw puzzles and anagrams, their singing of song hits at the piano, their mid-evening refreshments of cider and doughnuts. Afterward he had insisted that he had enjoyed himself, but he had never suggested a second visit or even mentioned the Cullens again.

"I could get up a nice little dinner some night and you could bring him over," said Aunt Nell, smiling, hospitable as she always was. "You just set the date, Susie." When she smiled all the lines in her face slanted upward, as lines do in the faces of middle-aged people who have always laughed a great deal and been mentally alert.

She always said that she never had done much worrying in her life except about the children. When they were little she had worried about scarlet fever and rusty nails, croup and teeth coming in crooked. Later on she had worried over the kind of education that each of them should have. Now she worried about the girls when they stayed out too late, about Howard's fast driving and his girl friends and the occasional smell of cigarettes that hung about his clothes.

The other side of the room belonged to Mary, and it was crowded with her possessions and overlaid with her personality. There were snapshots of her men friends and her girl friends all over the wall. There were green silk mules, edged with gold kid, under the bed and her armchair was piled with small green and yellow silk pillows. The glass top of the dressing table was covered with ivory brushes and combs, with toilet bottles filled with perfume and "skin freshener," with lipsticks in bright little metal cases, with big jars of cold cream and little jars of no-shine nose cream and blue eye shadow. A lamp with a frivolous, frilly green silk shade stood on the bedside table, and beside it lay a volume of a snappy story which Mary was reading for her own pleasure, and two volumes of Marcel Proust which the head librarian at the North Side Branch had asked her to look over before Monday

Somehow, during her busy week-end, Mary would manage to do it Here was the quick eye that picks up a whole paragraph of reading matter at a glance or two and takes it in.

Limbs Must be Sleek, Well Groomed

Superfluous Hair Is Now Banned by All Beauty Modes

By Juliet Shelby

AT ONE TIME, and not so long ago, it was considered most indelicate to speak of superfluous hair on women. And to remove it was being quite mad Today, however, women do not mince matters. They are constantly in quest for beauty, and if an unnecessary growth of hair detracts from the vision they aspire to, they remove it safely and simply and go on their pretty ways.

The removal of superfluous hair may be either permanent or temporary. Electrolysis (the electric needle) in the hands of a person skilled in its use is the only satisfactory method of removing hair permanently. This method is excellent for lip hair or an occasional single hair growth, but it is not suited for the depilation of large surfaces.

For the removal of hair from the arms and legs there are many chemical and mechanical methods. But unless you are actually convinced of the harmlessness of a chemical depilatory (such as a liquid, cream or power) do not use it. There is always the possibility of damaging the skin and the deeper tissues by some virulent poison.

Of the mechanical methods there are two which are safe. One is to clip each hair as short as possible with manicure scissors and then rub down the hair stumps with the finer toilet pumice. Four ounces or more may be bought for 10 cents in any drugstore. This method, however, is tedious if the growth of hair is thick and dark.

So, like many a scrupulous beauty, you will find yourself resorting to the wax method as the safest and most effective. It is odorless and contains no harmful chemical.

A well known cosmetic house presents the wax method in a very compact and efficient set which is handy to take with you when you travel. The directions for using this hair eradicator are simple, but if you have never used wax I advise you to try it on a small skin area for your initial experiment. You will soon become adept in putting it on and yanking it off!

You dust the skin with powder against the grain of the hair. Heat the wax to a semi-molten state and when cool enough spread it in thick strips up and down on the skin to be cleaned. When it hardens pull it off with a quick upward 'yank'—and lo! your skin is painlessly shorn. If it shows a slight red irritation, pat on a bit of the special soothing cream which comes with the set.

In removing hair wax a certain proportion of the "roots" are permanently destroyed, and the bulk of the hair grows back very gradually. If you wish to retard the growth still more, use toilet pumice over the shorn area every time you bathe. Pumice also tends to smooth the skin.

With the bathing season at hand look to the grooming of your limbs. It takes a beach scene to distinguish the meticulous woman from the careless.

If you will telephone to Juliet Shelby, Liberty 4000, you can learn the name of this wax for removing hair, and where it can be bought. If you prefer writing for this information, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Miss Shelby, Boston Evening American, Boston.

WHEN YOU HOP into your daring but chic new swim suit you will want your limbs to be as sleek and well groomed as hands and nails. Frances Drake knows that it takes a beach scene to distinguish the meticulous woman from the careless, these days.

Typhoid Still Bad Vacation Menace

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

During warm weather outbreaks of typhoid fever will be reported throughout the country. It is probable that most of these epidemics will be traced to carelessness in the choice of drinking water and to the taking of contaminated food. Contaminated drinking water and sea foods obtained from condemned water supplies constitute a menace to health and life. Fortunately, it is a decreasing menace.

The dangers of typhoid fever cannot be overstated. It is a serious disease and unless recognized in its early stages leads to distressing consequences. We can be glad it is no longer the grave menace it was in former years when litle was known of the real nature of this disease.

Many of you will recall the days when typhoid fever was a dreaded and all too common disease. Our soldiers in the Spanish-American war suffered more from the germs of typhoid fever than they did from the bullets of the enemy. Many a survivor continues to suffer from the lasting effects of the attack

These experiences are in marked contrast to those of the soldiers in the recent World War who were protected against typhoid fever by inoculation with typhoid vaccine. This protective substance, known as the "triple vaccine," is given to soldiers and sailors, as well as to employes in the federal service who are located where typhoid fever is prevalent

The vaccine is always recommended for individuals who travel where the disease may be encountered. It should be given to all who live in a community in which typhoid fever has broken out, or where suspected cases repeatedly occur. It is a preventive measure and of great value to those who visit typhoid fever districts.

Although the administration of typhoid fever vaccine gives protection against the disease, it is difficult to convince everybody of the necessity of using it This is particularly the case because the disease is not as prevalent as in former years.

Fortunately, the disease can also be prevented by the purification of all foods and food handlers. Persons employed in public places who come in contact with food are required by law to be examined at periodic intervals. All those who harbor typhoid fever germs are a menace to a community. The danger is increased when they are employed in restaurants and bakeries. This danger can only be overcome by periodic and strict examination of all food handlers. I am glad to say this procedure is practiced in most progressive communities.

Mouth Massage Aids Lips

Question: Can anything be done to improve the shape of an unattractive mouth? Plastic surgery is out of the question because my income is rather limited at the present time.

K. D., Bangor, Me

Answer: Massage can to some extent eradicate lines left by worry, petulance and anger. It will not change an ugly mouth into a beautiful one, but then, very few women have naturally homely lips. Here is a simple massage that will help you I am sure. Place the [illegible] the center of the upper [illegible] at one corner, second finger at the other. Keep the first finger stationary, draw up thumb and second finger. A nice Cupid's bow can be worked up with daily massaging this way.

Surface Dust

Question: Always after a shampoo I notice a dusty gray deposit on my brush. Do you suppose I am using the wrong kind of soap or am I neglecting the rinsing?

A. L., Boston,

Answer: A trace of soap scum might account for the deposit clinging to your brush after a shampoo. The final rinsing is very important and should be done with a bath spray whenever possible. Another important detail of the shampoo is the first rinsing before soap is applied. It always removes surface dirt which otherwise might cling to the hair

Wood Chopping

Question: A roll of fat about my waist is causing me much uneasiness and embarrassment. I have heard that the so called wood chopping exercise guarantees to diminish the waist line. But as I have no wood to chop I am wondering if some other exercise would accomplish the same results.

R. R. W., Waltham.

Answer: The wood-chopping exercise is a grand weight reducer but there is no need of hunting a wood pile or buying an ax. I merely substitute a flat iron for wood in the strokes and find that [illegible] of fat fairly roll away. If you are interested in this exercise send a stamped, self-addressed evelope to me and I will be glad to furnish you the grand [illegible] reducer

'From Palookas to Primo' — Life of Max Baer

By Al Santoro and John Walbridge

MANASSA MAULER IS HIS IDEAL

Livermore and Galt, California, shake a fist at one another now and then. But just to keep the record straight Max Baer, who waded through a long line of palookas to Primo, was born in Omaha, Nebraska, February 11, 1909. As small boy he lived in Colorado, the state that gave pugilism the Manassa Mauler. Jack Dempsey, from the start, was his ideal.

SISTER FRANCES PROTECTED MAXIE

Baer had some schooling at San Lorenzo, California, and while Max is now a fearless fighter, he knew nothing of the art of fisticuffs then. His sister Frances laughs heartily each time Max recounts his deeds in the ring, for she recalls Max as "an awful cry baby." He was so timid Frances warded off the attacks of other boys at school who picked on young Maxie.

HIS FIRST AFFAIR WITH FISTS

The Baer family moved to Galt, California. There Max had his first fist fight. A steeplejack, attending the town dance, had secreted a bottle of wine. Some boys swiped it. The boys blamed Max. He was the largest. Baer admitted the charges. At cries of "Fight! Fight!" they put up their dukes. Max knocked out the steeplejack. It was the starting point of a brilliant ring career that put Baer in position to challenge for the world's heavy-weight title.

LIFTED BEEVES LIKE SACKS OF SUGAR

The family came to Livermore. Max's father, Jacob, was engaged in stock farming and butchering. Baer grew as strong as the bullocks his father raised. That early training gave him muscles of steel. He lifted quarter beeves onto a truck as though they were sacks of sugar

Kase Picks Celt To Win by K. O. Bush Likes Ross

Bartell vs. Vaughan Which Recalls Time Judge Was Spiked

By MAX KASE

Fight interest in the local precincts has been deader than a fractured resolution. But the corpse is showing signs of life under the stimulating hypo of the Ross-McLarnin knuckle duel at the Long Island City Bowl tonight.

The local clients are beginning to speculate on the outcome with a warmish and a heatish enthusiasm, if you'll pardon the ishes. When the customers are willing to speculate, if only on an outcome, there's still a kick remaining and some hope surviving for boxing in this area.

The revived interest should prove encouraging to Signor Valenti and Sir Richard Dunn, a pair of incurable optimists, who have tossed long stalks of asparagus down a bottomless well trying to needle red, healthy corpuscles into the near-stilled cauliflower industry.

Being an inexpert expert in such matters, I am well qualified to make a prediction. I like McLarnin to win and by a knockout. Every inexpert expert should have a reason for his so-called logic and after a long seance with the aforementioned logic, I offer this in support:

The sock is the thing among the gentlemen of the ring profession (Editor's note—This is an original thought culled after much brow corrugation) which makes Shamus the elitest of the ring elite. He'll have a 10-pound pull in the weights at ringtime tonight. This should be something like adding gin to rye to lend authority to a liquid tidbit.

Guy Bush, the only sideburned pitcher in captivity, was discussing the fight. Ross is his friend, and Bush is Barney's biggest and most enthusiastic rooter.

BARNEY CAN TAKE IT ? SAYS GUY BUSH
FBQ

"I think Barney will win," said Guy, known as Joe to the rest of the Cubs. "He has courage, maintains his balance and head when things go against him and can take a punch. That's the sign of class."

Ross can blot up a punch in better manner than any of the non-Aryans McLarnin has punched out in the past. Certainly, he is a more rugged type than Singer, Terris, Goldstein, Glick or Sangor.

But—a 10-pound weight edge and the thunder of McLarnin's punch are twin arguments which probably will decide the battle, in the crystal gazing of this prophet, at least.

Bush's diagnosis of Ross' qualities is doubly interesting.

"He has courage, maintains his balance and can take a punch," says the swarthy Mississippian.

It is just these attributes that help make Guy one of the outstanding pitchers of his league. He was belted out of the box by the Braves yesterday, but that's a rare occurrence.

Bush has won seven and lost only two games this season. More than any other pitcher in the league, Guy makes a study of his art and opposing batsmen. He has mentally indexed the strength and weakness of every hitter in his circuit.

"I can tell you just what ball a batter hit off me as far back as last July," Bush told me.

The theme writers delight in the phrase, "The mills of the Gods grind slow, yet grind exceeding small."

There's the case of Richard Bartell, who will be here with the Phils tomorrow. Richard let out a long, agonizing blast in Philadelphia recently, that Arky Vaughan had deliberately beaned him in relaying the ball on a double play.

Flashback, as the Hollywood writers would say. The time is the second game of the National League season of 1933. The

GROVE RUSHES TO RESCUE OF SOX

By Bill Grimes

Detroit, Mich., May 28—After blowing two games to the Tigers, the Red Sox have their backs against the wall. Unless Robert Moses "Lefty" Grove comes through in the final game this afternoon they will be blanked in a series for the first time on this trip.

The Red Sox play better ball behind Robert Moses than they do when any of their other twirlers are on the hill top. Lefty won two of the four games the Sox have taken on this whirl around the western wheel.

After the Sox had kicked away two games in St. Louis, Lefty went to the mound, stopped the Browns and won his own game with a home run. He did not work in Chicago but opened against Cleveland, which was his second victim.

The Tigers have not beaten Grove in six years, and he is just as anxious to preserve his record as Detroit is to break it.

LEGS, ARM HOLD UP

During the game with the Indians, Grove showed he was the Grove of old. He was anything but satisfied with his work in St. Louis, due to the fact that his leg went back on him in the eighth and ninth innings.

Down in the Forest City, however, he was at his best during the last two innings. He hopped them through with all his old time speed, and, between us, it is a feat to beat the Indians in Cleveland now that they are back in their old ball park. Ask Joe McCarthy and Connie Mack.

Big Fred Marberry was to be pitted against Robert Moses "Lefty" Grove this afternoon, and the Sox expected to give the ex-Senator a warm reception. The Red Sox have not played good ball for three days but they are hitting, and Marberry will need to have his entire repertoire if he expects to stop them today.

KICK ANOTHER WAY

For the third time on this trip the Red Sox ruined "Dusty" Rhodes' chances of annexing his sixth victory by some very bush league infield play. Due to misplays on the part of his teammates, Rhodes was left out on limbs in St. Louis, Chicago and here. He should have won each of these games and would have had he received the proper support.

Brandt-Cuyler Trade Winds Howling

Trade winds are blowing around the Wigwam. They say toss Ed Brandt out to Chicago and pull Kiki Cuyler, a pitcher and an infielder from the Cubs to the Braves. Then again, they may not.

Anyway, such a transaction is being discussed by the boys—meaning President W. M. Walker of the Cubs and Judge Fuchs.

Walker arrived in town yesterday and, after the game, went into a long huddle with the Tribal "Prexy," while Managers Bill McKechnie and Charlie Grimm waited on the sidelines.

The pilots talked things over Saturday, but not for long. "I'll give you Gyselman for English," said McKechnie. "You can have Joiner for Brandt," said Grimm. That ended it.

But the owners got down to serious business, though nobody concerned would reveal the identity of any of the players under discussion.

It is known, however, that the Cubs have long wanted Brandt. And McKechnie has told the world that he's after a high class outfielder and a reserve infielder.

The Judge, it is rumored, would part with his southpaw ace, if he could get Cuyler, Malone and Hack in return.

Magic Coin Picks McLarnin to Win

WARRIORS SEND FRANKHOUSE AFTER CUBS

By Joe Cashman

Our Braves have made their Freddie Frankhouse the National League's leading pitcher. In return they're asking the curve ball ace to prove his right to the pedestal on which they have placed him by conquering the Cubs in the third and deciding game of the series at the Wigwam this p. m. Which is fair enough.

The colorful Guy Bush, Chicago chucker with the thousand and one movements, none of which means a thing, had been out front with seven victories and one defeat, with Frankhouse trailing by a single win.

The Tribesmen ended Guy's reign in both emphatic and approved fashion in the Sunday contest by chasing him to the showers in five frames while "Huck" Betts was helping himself to a 5-0 shutout triumph before [illegible] of our best people.

NOBLE EXPERIMENT

The Cubs aren't going to let Bush down without offering the strongest argument at their command. Word from Manager Cholly Grimm is to the effect that he'll take the wraps off Bill Lee for the finale.

In case you haven't been following the Windy City outfit very closely, this Lee fellow, who ambled up from Columbus late last season carrying a heavy price tag, is no relation to Robert E. or old Hal, but he's become quite a hero in his own right.

Desperate for hurlers a few weeks back Grimm started the large lad—he stands three inches over six feet and weighs close to 200. The experiment paid the fancy dividend of a four-hit whitewash victory for the Cubs. Then within a week Big Bill came right back with a three-hit shutout.

It will be no novelty to Frankhouse to be pitted against a worthy foe. He's faced none but the best all season and has been whipping them consistently.

GOOD OLD FRED

Oddly enough, Fred's lone defeat was at the hands of the lowly Phils. He's stopped the Cards and Dodgers twice, the Pirates and the Reds for his six wins.

Though he's been one of the most effective of the Tribal hurlers since coming here from St. Louis back in 1930, this fast start is something new in Fred's career. In past seasons he was inclined to be wild in the spring.

50,000 Pay $200,000 to See Battle of Champions

By Jack Conway

New York, May 28—One of the biggest fistic surprises in years was furnished when Jimmy McLarnin, welterweight champion, and Barney Ross, lightweight king, stepped on the scales of the New York boxing commission to be weighed in for their 15-round title battle at Long Island Bowl tonight.

The baby-faced McLarnin was expected to tip the beam at least 10 pounds heavier than the Jewish challenger, but his advantage turned out to be a mere 4¼ pounds.

It wasn't that Ross was heavy, but that McLarnin was light. Jimmy weighed 142 pounds. Ross weighed in a moment later at 137¾.

OPINIONS VARY

Opinion among the experts differed widely as to whether the low weight would help or hurt the Vancouver Irishman. Some felt that Jimmy would be faster than ever and be able to outpoint his opponent. Others feared that "Baby Face" had trained down too fine to stand the pace of 15 fast rounds.

McLarnin was grim at the weighing ceremonies.

He answered Ross' salutation, "Hello Jimmy," with a brusque "How'ya Barney." He made no reply to Ross' observation that "it looks like a great night for it."

The weather man predicted a perfect May evening with the temperature between 60 and 70.

McLarnin is expected to pick up plenty of weight before the fight starts. He may have closed to a [illegible] at ring time.

Sentiment will [illegible] with [illegible] tonight. Thousands of Jewish fans will be at the ringside to [illegible] for a Ross victory. They are eager to see Ross [illegible] revenge for the knockout of eight Jewish boxers by McLarnin, Irish.

McLarnin will have plenty of backers tonight. Irish boxers have always been popular [illegible]. Witness the successes of Mike O'Dowd and Mickey Walker.

MAC GETS $55,000

McLarnin has not come [illegible] out of a corner to give battle since he knocked out Young Corbett in a round a little more than a year ago. Meanwhile Ross has twice fought Tony Canzoneri while he also battled Billy Petrolle and three minor opponents.

McLarnin naturally has gathered ring rust, but whether this will be sufficient to cause his defeat is [illegible].

If McLarnin had been boxing [illegible] he would be a top-heavy favorite. His lighter opponent would not be given a chance to win.

McLarnin has tasted those luxuries which go with money, and this has slowed him down a bit. He has very little interest in the boxing game, and if it were not for the $[illegible] he will get tonight he would not even go out to the Garden Bowl.

Hungry fighters make the best fighters. In the case of Ross, he is determined to win the welterweight title and gain the money and glory that would go with a victory over McLarnin.

It is expected that a crowd of [illegible] persons will pay more than $200,000 to see the Battle of the Champions.

What the Fighters Say

New York, May 28 (INS)—Both Jimmy McLarnin, welterweight champion, and Barney Ross, lightweight titleholder, promised a fast battle in their 15-round bout tonight.

"I am going to carry the fight to Ross right from the start," McLarnin said, "and I don't intend to be outsmarted. If necessary, I can go at top speed for 15 rounds."

Ross said,

"I'm sure I'll win the decision. I'm in great shape and expect to own the welterweight title as well as the lightweight championship. I'm not afraid of McLarnin's punching power."

DempseyPicks McLarnin Over Ross

New York, May 28 (INS)—Here are the predictions of various fighters and fistic authorities on the outcome of the McLarnin-Ross bout tonight:

PRIMO CARNERA, heavyweight champion—"Ross will outbox McLarnin."

RAY MILLER, lightweight boxer—"McLarnin's wallops will be too much for Ross."

By Bill Grimes

Detroit, May 28—Mickie Cochrane's Tigers have not seen Mr. Grove in action this season. Probably they have heard rumors that the rangy portsider is not the Grove of old. They are liable to experience a sad awakening.

Wes Ferrell arrived at Navin Field during the fifth inning. Wes appears to be in mid-season form and will open against the Athletics in Philly tomorrow.

Just before leaving his home in Greensboro, N. C., Wes played a round of golf with George Corcoran, brother of Freddie Corcoran, state handicapper. Wes stated that George, who is the pro at the country club in Greensboro is shooting very well and is a great favorites with the natives.

As Eddie Morgan came into the Red Sox bench at the end of the fourth inning some fan yelled, "You're having a tough day out there, Morgan." "No tougher than that so and so umpire," came back Eddie, referring to George Hildebrand, who has shown himself to be the world's worst guesser in this series.

Although he is no longer allowed to umpire back of the plate, Hildebrand still retains his berth on the umpirical roster. He must have something on the powers that be or he would, long since, have been back in the fog of San Francisco instead of being in a fog around this circuit.

Nig Clarke, the old Cleveland catcher, has been visiting the Red Sox since they arrived here. Nig wishes to send his kindest regards over home to Billy O'Connell, the fighting marine, who is now a sports photographer.

Dick Porter is hitting in great style since he joined the Sox. And this same Mr. Porter is a pretty good looking all around ball player. Porter, Cissell and Reynolds were the only Sox who came up with two hits off "Schoolboy" Rowe.

From a reliable source, I learned today that Mickie Cochrane was all set to pull up his stakes and return to his home in Philadelphia last week.

During a dinner given to Cochrane at the Detroit Yacht Club while the Athletics were here Connie Mack declared that if the "A's" did not win the pennant he hoped the Red Sox would for the sake of Tom Yawkey and Lefty Grove. It requires some courage to stand up before 1200 [illegible] Detroit fans and make such a statement. But Connie never wanted for courage.

Jack Adams, manager of the Detroit Red Wings, is a daily visitor at Navin Field. Jack is a great fan, as is Mrs. Adams.

All 10 entries in the Boston Park League are scheduled to play tonight. In the feature contest the Raymond Club of Allston, new entrant in the circuit in the place of the Brighton Civics, plays Jordan Marsh at Dorchester Town Field.

Jefferson [illegible] playground should be the mecca for a large number of fans when [illegible] rivals, Hennigans and Caseys, cross bats. Last season both clubs met in the playoffs.

Leo Loinb [illegible] sensational young moundsman for the Upcos, is slated to start against Billy Bens[illegible] St. Augustine nine at Roberts Playground.

West Medford is host to First National Stores, and Waltham entertains Norwood Civics in the only Surburban Twi League encounters booked for tonight.

The Medford entry will be making its debut under the management of the former Holy Cross star Dick Phelan [illegible] Safford, one time a member of the Jersey City entry in the International circuit.

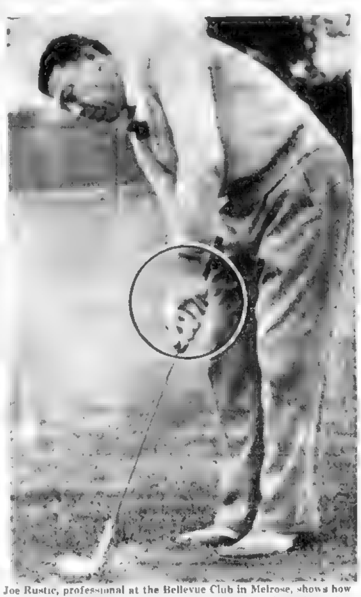
Hall's All-Stars went into a tie for league leadership with the Waltham club, when they upset Norwood Civics 13 to 4 in the feature Sabbath tilt. Johnny C[illegible] of the Civics was knocked out of the box by the heavy Somerville artillery, which collected 20 hits. In the other game St. Peter's scored five hits in the fifth to edge Winthrop 7 to 4.

Nineteen games are booked for the Boston Twi League this week with three of the tilts set for the holiday afternoon. Tonight Waltham plays the league leader Arlington, at Spy Pond Field. Cambridge Red Sox entertain Frasers All-Stars, and Rosebuds clash with Mayor Hagan Club at Malden Stadium.

The batting averages for the first two weeks released today by Ray Finnegan show Joe Hebert, outfielder for the Jordan Marsh crew leading the circuit with an average of 668. Second is Oree Corella, Roslindale third baseman, with .500; and third is the veteran Teddy Donovan, with 475.

Two games are booked for the Retail Store League this week. Tonight at South Boston Stadium representatives of Jordans and Gilchrists' meet on the diamond while S. S. Pierce and Houghton Stores are scheduled to play Friday.

Golf Expert Illustrates Proper Grip and Stance for Mashie Niblic



Joe Rustic, professional at the Bellevue Club in Melrose, shows how to hold the niblic for full shots. Note club gripped firmly in fingers, body bent forward from hips, ball played closer to feet than in other iron shots. Note also open stance, right foot advanced. (Pictures by Boston American Staff Photographer.)

Grip, Stance Important in Mashie Niblic Play, Says Bellevue Pro

This is another in the interesting series of pointers by leading golf professionals of the Boston area, describing play of various clubs for the purpose of improving YOUR game.

By JOE RUSTIC
Professor at Bellevue Golf Club

The mashie niblic, one of the most useful clubs in the bag, is used for shots of 120 to 130 yards, such as the approach shot. It is also used for chip shot.

The long shot is the purpose of this article. The chip shot is played differently, and for lack of space I will confine my remarks to the full shot.

First, the grip. There are several kinds. For men with stronger wrists the overlapping grip [illegible] grip the club with the fingers rather than the palms. Overlap the left forefinger with the right little finger, left thumb pointed down the center of the shaft, right thumb pointed slightly to the left are the knuckles of the left hand. This puts left thumb in middle of right palm. This subject has been well covered in a previous article. Keep the wrists firm throughout and use the first three fingers of the right hand for control.

PLAY BALL CLOSE

Third, stand with the weight on the heels. This is important in all strokes as it insures proper body balance. Heels about 10 inches apart.

Next the back swing. Sweep the club slowly back with rigid left arm close to the body, wrists firm, letting the hips and shoulders turn with the back swing. Keep your head down and your eyes on the ball. During the back swing, the weight shifts mostly to the right heel.

In the mashie niblic shot, the hands are raised about as high as the right shoulder, wrists break or bend, about three-quarters of the way up, yet remain firm.

KEEP HEAD DOWN

On the down stroke, start the club handle first, right elbow close to the body and hit down to the turf. During the swing, the head should be held with the chin down and the eyes on the ball. After the ball is hit, the head does not change its position. At time of impact, the left arm and club are like one solid lever from left shoulder down to club head.

In continuing the swing or "follow thru," imagine allowing the club head to follow the ball at the same time shifting your weight to the left. Have the arms straight at the finish of the swing.

Leo Connor, professional at the Arlmont Country Club, will have an article on the three iron in Thursday's Boston Evening American.

B. C. EXPECTED TO WIN SERIES WITH H. C.

By Walter Kiley

Boston College stands its finest chance to lift its annual baseball series with Holy Cross in a good many years. On Wednesday afternoon the Eagles undefeated in College ranks though bowing to the Colonials of New Haven 12-3, throw their best balanced team in a decade against the powerful hitting Crusaders.

It is the first of a three-game series, the others to be played on June 11 at Chestnut Hill and the third at Fitton Field, Worcester, on June 19.

Pitching should tell the story on Wednesday. Here the Frank McCrehan squad seems to have a slight edge. Bob Duffy has overcome his old fault of wildness, and is slated to see his name written in upper case letters with the few Boston College pitchers who have defeated Holy Cross.

Johnny McManus of Boston College lived up to predictions when he finished second to Bullet Bob Kiesel of California in the intercollegiate 100-meter dash.

Phil Good, only a sophomore at Bowdoin, should be taking firsts in both hurdles at the I. C. 4 A championships another year. On Saturday he was a good first in the 110-meter highs and second to Klopstock of Stanford in the 220-meter lows.

Stan Johnson, son of the M. I. T. trainer, delivers his best when the competition is strongest. He came through with a great performance of 24 feet 1½ inches to take second to Clark of California in the running broad jump. Jim Sandler of Northeastern, who tied for second in the high jump, is another who reaches his best heights under pressure.

FRAME UNHURT IN AUTO CRASH

By Associated Press

Indianapolis, May 28—Fred Frame, winner of the 500-mile race at Indianapolis motor speedway two years ago, became a doubtful starter in the 1934 classic today when his machine hit a retaining wall while he was making his qualifying run.

Frame escaped injury, but his car was so damaged it was uncertain whether it could be put into shape before the time trials end this afternoon.

Frame was piloting the car in which Billy Arnold of Chicago won the 500-mile event in 1930 and in which he crashed through the wall of the northwest turn at the local track both in 1931 and 1932. By strange coincidence Frame's accident also occurred on the same curve.

Speedway officials attributed Frame's accident to the breaking of a steering arm of his eight cylinder, front drive car. It was estimated he was traveling about 12 0miles an hour.

Mr. Boston Says:—

Wollaston Road Race
Sullivan Memorial
Sonny vs. Dusek

By Jack Conway

THEY ARE going to have a ten-mile road race in Wollaston Memorial Day afternoon. It will be conducted under the auspices of the Wollaston Sporting Club, which means the athletes will receive the best possible care and the spectators will get every opportunity to enjoy a thrilling contest.

There is a real thought behind the Wollaston race. It is known as the William J. Sullivan Jr. Memorial Race.

Mr. Boston

I never had the good fortune to know youthful Billy Sullivan but I have known his good father for many years. And they all tell me Billy Jr. was a chip of the old block. Which means he was a splendid character and possessed all the fine traits we admire in young men.

Billy Jr. was a football player at North Quincy High. He recently [illegible] one of his feet when he stepped on a sharp piece of stone while coming out of the water after a swim. Loss of blood caused his death.

[illegible] Billy Jr. was a first class athlete, his friends decided one of the best ways to pay tribute to his memory was to stage the Memorial Day race. There will also be a memorial [illegible] at the Wollaston Sporting Club. It will carry the name of William J. Sullivan Jr. and that of every winner of the Wollaston race.

ONE HUNDRED runners will compete for honors. There will be the Karhu team of Quincy, led by Captain Johnny Ganzel, Bill Carrigan, Norwood A. A.; Alex Koleski, Chelsea, Arthur Newton, Fairlawn A. C.; Walter Novak, South Boston, Stanley Suchecki St. Mary's Club, Gabriel Morrow, Hopkinton, Willie MacTear, Wollaston; Jas White, Wollaston; Atlantic A. C. team, and other first class runners.

Sonny Battles Dusek

GUS SONNENBERG will try to prove that Ernie Dusek is just another wrestler when he clashes with the Nebraska Wildman in a finish bout, best two falls out of three at a Paul Bowser show at the Garden on Friday night.

Personally I am much more anxious to see the old Dynamiter and Dusek in action than I was to see Ernie collide with Ed George. Sonny and Dusek are forceful grappiers. They take reckless chances and something has got to give when they crash in the center of the Garden ring.

SONNENBERG VS Dusek, if the wrestling game's effort to prove that mat men give more action than any other branch of sport

AND THE winner will, of course demand a crack at George. Dusek still believes he can lick the champion, while Sonnenberg is eager to regain his lost title.

OTHER BOUTS will be Joe Malcewicz vs. Rudy Dusek, Ernie's brother; Hans Steinke, powerful German, vs. Billy Bartush, Everett Marshall, fiery petrel of the west vs. Boris Demetroff; Cowboy Turner, vs. Jake Patterson, Len Macaluso, old Colgate football star vs. George Saunders and Pat O'Hara, belligerent Irishman vs. John Spellman, former Brown grid hero.

Wallingford vs. Robbins

Berger Homers 3 Weeks Apart

And Both Helped to Beat Chicago Cubs

What price [illegible] The Cubs made [illegible] on Saturday and won 6 to 4. They made the same number [illegible] and were defeated [illegible] second.

The last time the Tribe slugger [illegible] out of a park was [illegible] May [illegible] out on Wrigley Field, Chicago. Randy Moore snapped out of a long hitting slump at a great opportune time. His single with the sacks loaded in the second manufactured the Tribe's first two runs.

Guy Bush was yanked after he had forced in a run by walking McManus in the fifth. Pat Malone sent to the rescue, let Spohrer stroll, forcing in another marker.

Bartell hits to the infield. Judge stretches to take the throw. Bartell, running INSIDE the baseline, comes down on Judge's ankle, not only spraining the member but inflicting an ugly gash wound. That play put Joe out of the game for several months and led to his release by the Dodgers.

"I've been playing first base for 18 seasons," Judge told me with bitterness after the game. "I don't have to be taught how to play that position. Of course, it wasn't deliberate, but imagine this happening to me."

And now Bartell claims Vaughan deliberately beaned him.

We were discussing big hands on baseball players. Burgess Whitehead of the Cards was voted the largest mitts. Lavagetto of the Pirates is another with what is termed "capable hands." Jimmy Dykes, White Sox manager, and big Ernie Lombardi of the Reds, are others with shovel dukes. Pi Traynor also has large hands. Pi always delights in telling the following yarn on himself:

When I was a kid," relates Pi, "I asked a peanut vendor how much for a handful of peanuts. He said three cents. So I scooped up a handful. The peanut man looked on rather startled at my scoop. Finally, he said: 'Put them back, and I'll give you a dime for them.'"

Quite some hands.

REPORT WILMER ALLISON DROPPED FROM DAVIS CUP TEAM

INJURED ANKLE HAS FAILED TO HEAL

By Associated Press

New York, May 28—Sources close to the United States Lawn Tennis association indicated today when the Davis cup squad to go abroad is selected, probably on Wednesday, the name of Wilmer Allison, Texas doubles player, will not be included.

Allison suffered a badly sprained ankle on May 5 while playing at the Chevy Chase Club in Washington and the injury has been slow in healing. It is not considered likely that the Texan's foot will be strong enough for international competition.

Barring an unforeseen defeat by Mexico in the American zone elimination series at Baltimore beginning on Thursday, the team that probably will be named to go abroad will comprise George M. Lott, Jr. and John Van Ryn for doubles and Lester R. Stoefen, Frank X. Shields and Sidney B. Wood Jr., for singles play.

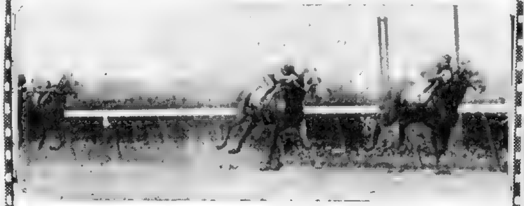
Speed Is Trumps in These Sport Tests

Phil Good showed there's something in a name after all when he raced to a driving triumph in the I. C. 4-A. 110-meter hurdles final. He is shown beating Johnny Fatseas, N. Y. U. star, in the time of 15.1.



Singing Wood, with Jones up, splashes through a sea of mud to win a hollow victory in the historic Withers at Belmont on Saturday. Roustabout was second with Chickstraw third.

Six Colleges to Hold Meet at Princeton

Representatives of Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Lafayette, Pennsylvania and Cornell at a meeting last week in Philadelphia during the running of the I. C. 4-A. meet, decided to hold a track and field meet at Princeton, May 11, 1935.

The date for this affair will in no way interfere with the track schedules of the colleges entered. The colleges taking part at the present time compete in basketball and baseball and the motive behind the movement is to add interest to track sports for colleges that do not enter in the annual Philadelphia affair.

Asa Bushnell was elected chairman and James Swartz of Penn was named secretary. It was intimated that New Haven would be the scene of activities in 1936.

Odds Shorten on Colombo in Derby

London, May 28 (AP)—Lord Glanley's unbeaten colt Colombo today became an odds on choice, at 4 to 7 against, for the Epsom Derby June 6. The price was the shortest quoted on a derby favorite in years.

The Aga Khan's Umidwar is second choice at 10 to 1, with the French bred colt Easton third at 21 to 2.

Bonthron Leads Eastern Squad

Los Angeles, May 28 (AP)—With the National Collegiate track and field championships here June 22 and 23 drawing from the Atlantic seaboard as never before, indications pointed today to a wide open team contest.

But Bonthron, Princeton's double winner in the I. C. A. A. A. A. meet Saturday, will head the eastern delegation. The probability was seen that Harvard, Pennsylvania, and perhaps Yale, along with other eastern I. C. 4-A members, would send competitors.

BROOKLYN BUYS YANK HURLER

Brooklyn, May 28 (AP)—The Brooklyn Dodgers of the National Baseball League today announced the purchase of Harry Smythe, left-handed pitcher from the New York Yankees, for an unnamed amount of cash.

Smythe will report to Manager Casey Stengel within the next few days. Until he arrives the Dodgers will not release any of their present 23 players, the major league limit.

Smythe won 21 and lost 8 with Baltimore in the International Circuit last year, but has yet to record a major league victory for the Yankees. Appearing in 8 games as a relief hurler, he is charged with two defeats.

Reject Request for Track Loan

Pittsfield, Mass. May 28 (AP)—Representative Allen T. Treadway said today that Robert D. Kohn, director of housing under the federal housing program, had rejected a request for a $10,000,000 loan to provide a race track and recreational center at Lenox, famous Berkshire Hills resort.

A proposal had been advanced that the Berkshire Hunt and Country Club in Lenox be used as a part of the development.

Revere Senators Win Third Straight

The Revere Senators won their third straight win of the week, in the Revere City League by defeating the Revere Braves, 8 to 6, at Curtis Park.

96 ENTER RACES AT READVILLE

With 96 already entered in the first annual Daisy Sweepstakes, the automobile classic to be held at the Readville Track Wednesday afternoon, Memorial Day, interest is already at fever heat, and it is predicted that a crowd of close to 50,000 will witness the event.

The meet has been sanctioned by the New England Automobile Racing Association for the New England championship, and the finest drivers in this part of the land have entered.

Entries have been received from Providence, Bridgeport, Springfield, Worcester, Portland, Manchester and every principal city in New England.

Because of the great list of entrants, trials will be started at 12 o'clock. The feature races will commence at 3 o'clock on perhaps the most hazardous dirt track in the country.

ATTENTION OF FINANCE IS ON WASHINGTON

Wagner Labor Bill Is Latest Move of Importance

By HUGH E. BRADSHAW

Washington continues to hold the attention of State and Wall Streets. The latest development to assure the politicians that they are the center of attraction is the proposed introduction of the Wagner Labor Bill. Congressional speeches regarding the rights of workers are sure to draw the headlines while the views of businessmen representing capital will be "ploughed under." We remain of the opinion that any undue emphasis placed on the troubles of either capital or labor will create an unrest and react to the ultimate disadvantage of both. Confidence is a big word in the American scheme of things and it can not be trifled with while one is unmindful of its effect on business and industrial activity.

Robert F Wagner

Despite the varicolored outlook at Washington the stock market persists in saying it would rather move moderately than decline. As opportunists we must take note of this. The four stocks given here Saturday form the nucleus of a good trading position to which we add Phillips Pete, American Sugar and Borden. None of the issues is mentioned with the idea of buying strength. Prefer to await even minor reactions before attempting to take a bull stand.

* * *

Notes: For the sake of safety it will be wise to place stop loss orders just under the lows of last Wednesday . . . That is, if a long position is taken in here . . . Those who ask the name of a group capable of leading an upswing might add sugars and dairy issues to [illegible] . . . Incidentally United Fruit is not to be overlooked in selecting a likely sugar stock . . . Current equity prices discount the summer business letdown . . . That is what reliable observers tell us at any rate.

Federal Reserve Bank reports emanating from Atlanta are stirring up interest in a selected list of securities. For the reason they show increased commercial activity in the southeastern states. One list which contains Commonwealth & Southern, Southern Railways and North American Aviation catches our eye. Two low priced and one medium priced issue in the power and transportation fields offer a good chance to participate in the return of prosperity to the section.

Briefs: Tobacco shares are in for a play from the boys who do things in a big way . . . The reduction promised on tobacco taxes is the only reason . . . Chrysler is said to have discontinued the summer lull . . . And dip in earnings . . . Delaware & [illegible] the bigger traders like . . . Canada Dry Ginger Ale lost none of its friends desipte the sharp dip it had almost immediately after setting a new high for the year . . . Atlantic Coast Line is not without buyers.

* * *

For quite a spell now we have argued that the large complex industrial units were in need of being broken up into smaller, more compact concerns. The trend is visible in many directions and the financial octopus is gradually being done away with. The latest interesting comment on the big, fully integrated company comes from the American Iron & Steel Institute. It says the small, non-integrated steel companies fared better from an earnings standpoint than larger, fully integrated competitors.

Crude Rubber Steady

New York, May 28 (AP)—Crude rubber futures were barely steady, 6 to 10 lower. July, 12.25, September, 12.57-58; October, 12.46, December, 12.88.

Traders Ascribe Importance to Regulation Bill

By WALL ST. SPECTATOR

Wall Street goes into the new week with a slight undercurrent of optimism around. While the majority of traders are still despondent, weighed down principally by the current inactivity, some quarters ascribe considerable importance to the compromise on the regulation bill which involves the creation of an independent commission. The market, though, is still in a trading area and few are willing to do anything until a trend develops.

MARKET IS SEEN STABILIZED

For the first time since the current decline got underway the market is showing signs of stabilization.

The changes in the averages last week were insignificant. Industrials were off only 8 cents, rails down 26 cents and utilities up 12 cents. A continuation of this over the next few days will help dispel the gloom around at least to the extent that liquidation is apparently over. It will require a decided change in the current pessimism to create any bullishness, though.

The skittishness of Armour preferred is becoming an old story marketwise. The stock has been jumping around in the last few days, but it has done this before when a recapitalization plan was to be announced. Gossip is that the company's earnings are running at the rate of $1.50 a share on the new common stock to be created in the reorganization.

If there are any speculative favorites they are found in the tobaccos, sugars and the oils.

Traders are marking time on the mines pending settlement of the silver legislation program. Steels and motors have seen their business peak this year, it is believed. Sentiment on the rails is just so so, utilities are still friendless, while farm shares are restricted by the drought situation. We understand those blocks of stock listed in a prominent estate a few days ago have been pretty well liquidated.

Grains Soar in Chicago Trading

Chicago, May 28 (INS)—Alarming reports of damage due to prolonged drought in the grain belt sent grain prices soaring on the Chicago Board of Trade today.

Wheat rose 3 cents to 94¾ for the July delivery to a new high for the season.

Corn gained 1½ cents to 54⅞ and oats moved up 2 cents to 39¾ to the highest price since the middle of last November.

Cotton Steady in New York Market

New York, May 28 (INS)—Cotton futures steadied late today after an easier opening, as the list was buoyed by the sharp rise in wheat and strength in stocks. Losses of 25 cents a bale were recovered and contracts hovered around the previous close.

Quotations were unchanged to 1 point lower. July was unchanged at 11.43; October unchanged at 11.63, December unchanged at 11.71 and January off 1 at 11.75.

Houdaille Hershey Orders Dividend

New York, May 28 (AP)—Directors of the Houdaille Hershey Corp. have ordered a dividend of $1.25 on the class A preference stock, payable June 12 to stock of record June 7. Dividends on the stock are cumulative at the rate of $2.50 annually. The previous payment was made April 1, 1932.

DULLNESS OF MARKET BIG FEATURE

Absence of a Public Following and Leadership

By LEWIS HANEY
Professor of Economics New York University.

The most striking fact was the extreme dullness of the market and the low volume.

Only 3,184,000 shares changed hands all week. Not so long ago this would have been considered a fair day's volume. It compares with 22,741,000 shares traded during the same week a year ago.

Considering the news of the week, the dullness is probably the outstanding fact. What with the drought, strikes, money tinkering and Stock Exchange regulation bill—to say nothing of the curtailment of textiles, automobiles and steel—one might well have expected more weakness and selling pressure. But the market merely turned dead.

Thus the long gradual decline in April and May seems to have discounted the worst now in sight.

I think that the market shows signs of being readier to respond to good news than bad. It is technically in a fairly strong position and, insofar as it shows any tendency, it is trying to creep forward. I would, therefore, be inclined to stay with any sound, based position which I might have.

I can see no object in trying to "trade" in such a market. But the worst I can see is a little final dip, such as occurred at the end of the reaction last October, and investment positions should be held through such moves.

Possibly the most serious factor at present is found in the labor situation. This is not the mere attempt of labor to get in on the benefits of expanding business, such as attend cyclical upswings in business. Business is not expanding.

The present labor demonstrators are fanned by the notion of a "new deal." They do not concern higher wages so much as the control of business enterprises.

But the idea that Roosevelt would save us from riot is being exploded. Our laws and the machinery of our government are going to hold, and social order will be maintained. The new dealers are being forced to see that the various "forgotten men," and the elements of discontent are themselves divergent and conflicting. "Social justice" is not to be attained merely by tearing down established institutions.

Commodity Price Lifting Plan Is Viewed as Success

By Associated Press

New York, May 28—Proponents of the Warren Pearson gold policy, recently discussed in Washington, present an array of statistics to show that the commodity price lifting plan has been successful.

Considerable disagreement is evident among them, however, as to whether the present gold price of $35 an ounce is high enough.

One important member of the Warren-Pearson monetary school expresses the opinion that the present gold price is high enough if the country is patient. Over a period of time, perhaps two years, he thinks it will bring commodity prices up to the level of 1926.

The process might be speeded, he suggests, by boosting the price now and possibly reducing it somewhat later on.

Complaints that the Warren-Pearson theory has not worked, its supporters say, are largely based upon misconceptions of it and its objectives. The plan was to lift the price of basic, sensitive commodities, which, as a matter of fact, had declined most, and were farthest out of line.

The gold price has been put up 69 per cent, and compared with March, 1933, Moody's index of the 15 leading sensitive commodities, is up about 66 per cent. General prices, which include the more rigid items, which had not declined so much, have risen much less, as expected. The entire cost of living, measured by the national industrial conference board's index rose barely 10 per cent.

BOSTON SHARES ARE HIGHER

Share prices were moved upward in late trading on the Boston Stock Exchange today with gains in leading issues ranging from fractions to around 2 points. American Woolen preferred was strong, advancing 2 points.

Old Colony was a point higher and Atchison recorded a gain of better than a point. Boston & Albany moved against the general trend, slipping back a point. Edison Electric and American Telephone each showed gains of around a point.

Moderate improvement was noted for such issues as Eastern Gas & Fuel preferred, Kennecott Copper, Nash Motors, New Haven, Pennsylvania, Torrington, United Fruit, United Shoe and United Drug.

LABOR WARS ARE THREATENING INDUSTRY

Developments Reflect Uncertainty on Outlook

By B. C. FORBES

Relief felt by business over the pending adjournment of Congress is offset by violent labor troubles and threatened strikes on a very large scale.

B. C. Forbes

Later developments in industry, in securities, in employment, in commodities, in trade reflect the prevailing uncertainty regarding the nearby outlook. Unless Congress acts more reassuringly than is at the moment anticipated, irregularity may become rather pronounced during summer months.

Orders for steel have diminished seriously notwithstanding the announcements that a strike may be called throughout the whole industry by labor leaders. That attempts to bring about a "closed shop" will be vigorously resisted was proclaimed emphatically by the country's foremost steel executives. This prospect is inciting uneasiness in the business world.

Dealers are cutting down their orders for automobiles, influenced by some falling off in sales by a recession in optimism over the prospect for continuation of general economic recovery during coming months.

Makers of high priced cars are finding that the modest allowances prescribed under the dealers' code for big traded in cars are injuring their business.

Labor troubles, actual and feared, are rife also in the automotive industry, notwithstanding the claims of employers that the purchasing power of their workers' wages is higher today than ever before.

No life has yet returned to the far reaching building industry. The cost of material and labor is a restricted factor. Existing homes and other buildings usually can be bought for less than cost of erecting new structures. Public expenditures, however, are expanding and may infuse some degree of activity into the construction industry during the second half of the year.

The drought has lifted some farm prices but can hardly be interpreted as a national blessing.

The stock market has descended into the doldrums. Not only have quotations sagged and sagged until quoted values have shriveled billions, but dealings have dwindled inordinately. Few if any heavyweight operators are active, particularly on the constructive side. And small investors also appear unwilling to buy pending the final action of Congress on the legislation to "regulate" stock exchanges and corporations and pending modification of other uncertainties.

Bonds, on the other hand, are faring better—because they naturally are viewed as safer.

The financial, industrial and business world has learned that the time to raise money is when the rates are attractive. The government can hardly hope to expreience more attractive borrowing terms than those now ruling.

STOCKS HIGHER AT CLOSE OF TRADING

New York, May 28 — Stocks reached slowly for higher levels today and, while large scale operations were extremely scarce, the apparent upward trend impressed the annylists as a moderately bullish indicator.

Strength of grains may have aided the equity division, although this was based largely upon more serious drought reports. Wheat spurted about the daily limit of 5 cents a bushel and corn, oats, rye and barley were not far behind. Silver futures were barely steady and rubber turned a little heavy. Bonds were quiet. The dollar improved in foreign exchange markets.

Shares of du Pont, Case, Allied Chemical and American Beet Sugar preferred got up about 2 points each and gainers of around a point included International Harvester, Deere, Electric Autolite, Santa Fe, N. Y. Central, American Sugar Refining and McIntyre Porcupine.

The motor group, with General Motors, Chrysler and Hudson, was little better than even. The alcohols, utilities and tobaccos were only slightly higher and the silver stocks, such as U. S. and American Smeltings, marked time.

Some buying in the sugar issues was attributed to further hopes for this list in the light of new quotas. Announcement of the off-shore quotas was expected tomorrow. The rails did fairly well under the betterment of April earnings figures and the agricultural section was believed to have reflected the sharp advance of grains.

Moderately higher prices ruled in the first hour, with trading at a livelier pace than in the past few sessions. Gains ranged from 1 to more than two points in leaders. Case Threshing, Spiegel May Stern and Du Pont were 2 or more points higher. Dome Mines and Alaska Juneau were up around a point.

U. S. Steel showed a gain of a major fraction. Sears Roebuck advanced almost 2 points, reflecting report of increased sales. Oil shares were firm, with Houston advancing more than a point. U. S. Smelting showed a gain of a point.

Advances were largely maintained during the second hour although the trading volume dwindled.

Amusement shares responded to improvement in earnings. United Aircraft was steady, and the rubbers edged forward. Westinghouse was strong in the equipments.

Issues showing moderate improvement included American Telephone, Chrysler, Bethlehem Steel, Columbia Carbon, Electric Autolite, General Cigar, Johns-Manville, Northern Pacific and Schenley Distillers.

Sales to noon approximated 120,000 shares

Gains were well held in the third hour with trading continuing at an even pace. Homestake Mining was [illegible] points higher. Sears Roebuck gain was extended to more than 2 points. American Telephone, International Harvester, Cudahy Packing and du Pont were up a point or better.

Issues showing gains of a point or more included Atchison, Bethlehem Steel, Celanese, Commercial Investment Trust, General Cigar and Mack Truck. U. S. Steel was a major fraction higher. Bohn Aluminum was better than a point higher.

Sales to 1 p. m. approximated [illegible]00,000 shares.

Stocks held their gains in the fourth period. Buying in the sugar issues was attributed to further hopes for this list in the light of new quotas.

Commission firms with foreign connections find that, for the moment, European interest in American securities is hardly lukewarm and that, during the past ten days or so, some selling on balance has been in evidence.

Sales to 2 p. m. approximated 180,000 shares.

Wage Earnings Are 2.5 Per Cent Higher

New York, May 28—The National Industrial Conference Board estimates that average weekly earnings of wage earners in manufacturing industry in April were 2.5 per cent larger than in March and 35.6 per cent larger than in April, 1933. The April earnings, according to the board, were higher than in any month since October, 1931.

Great Northern Notes Authorized

Washington, May 28—Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie Railroad has requested I. C. C. authorization to renew for two years its R. F. C. loan of $5,000,000 maturing Aug. 1, next, and to renew $3,077,036 in notes owed to the Railroad Credit Corp.

Devoe & Raynolds Declares Extra

New York, May 28 (AP)—The Devoe & Raynolds Co. has declared the usual extra dividend of 25 cents and the regular quarterly of 25 cents on the Class A and B common shares. Both dividends are payable July 1 to stock of record June 20.

Money Rates

New York, May 28 (AP)—Call money steady; 1 per cent all day. Time loans steady; 60 days-6 mos. ¾-1 per cent. Prime commercial paper ¾. Bankers' acceptances unchanged. Thirty days ¼-3-16; 60-90 days ¼-3-16; 4 mos. ⅜-¼; 5-6 mos. ½-⅜. Rediscount rate, New York Reserve Bank, 1½ per cent.

DOLLAR GAINS IN EUROPE

By Associated Press

In London the dollar closed ½ cent better than Saturday's closing price, ending the day at 5.02¼ to the pound. The pound sterling lost ½ cent in New York at $5.08½.

The dollar rose in Paris also, gaining 1¼ centimes to close at the equivalent of 6.59½ cents to the franc, compared with last week's closing price of 6.660¾ cents. The franc was weak in New York, dropping .00¾ of a cent to 6.59½ cents, the lowest in several weeks.

The price of gold in London advanced 2½ pence to 136 shillings 8½ pence a fine ounce (equivalent to $34.80 on the basis of the dollar's opening of 5.09⅛.) Bars valued at about $1,099,600 were sold, reportedly for shipment to America.

Canadian Loan Oversubscribed

London, May 28 (AP)—The new Canadian $50,000,000 loan offered today was an immediate success, the lists closing an hour and a half after the opening.

The loan was very largely oversubscribed, but this did not affect prices on the gilt-edged market.

Model Builders' Course—Lesson 5

Greetings, Junior Birdmen! Any girl or boy, with proper guidance, can build model planes. The trouble with most enthusiasts is that, when they start, they try to bite off too big a piece. They try to build a flying stick model covered with tissue and having all the principles of junior aeronautics right off the bat.

The result is a shaky craft that won't fly and then the boy or girl becomes discouraged, believing he just isn't suited for such work and gives up.

Leonard Young

Don't YOU do that because you can build and fly good models if you follow this course exactly as it is outlined to you.

In learning to build models, as in building anything else, the boy or girl must start at the beginning and build a simple model. For that reason we have chosen the "Baby All-Balsa Glider" as our first model. It leaves out many of the difficult points which discourage so many beginners.

The Baby All-Balsa Glider has no tissue covered wings. It is built of all wood and hence the name All-Balsa Glider. Nor does it use wire clips to hold the wings on. It has them fixed right to the fuselage, as you will see in the illustration accompanying our first construction lesson for the glider which will appear in a few days.

Few materials are necessary in the construction of this glider. As a matter of fact nothing is required but a few sizes of Balsa. Of course a small bottle or tube of cement, a razor blade, sandpaper and a few pins are also needed. The pins are not used to keep the parts together as we use cement to accomplish this.

A glider must have a little weight in the nose for balance and so we will use the pins in a manner which will be described and illustrated for you in another lesson or so.

Get All Your Materials Now

Go to your nearest department store or model plane shop selling balsa wood and purchase, at once, the following balsa to construct your beginners' glider:—

One piece of "sheet" balsa for the wings one-sixteenth (1-16) of an inch in thickness, one and one-half (1½) inches in width and twelve (12) inches long. One piece of "sheet" balsa for the tail unit one-thirty-second (1-32) second of an inch thick, one and onequarter (1¼) inch wide and six and one-half (6½) inches in length, one piece of balsa "stick" for the fuselage measuring eight (8) inches in length and one quarter (¼) by one half (½).

That is absolutely all the materials necessary. They should not cost you more than six or eight cents. The tube or bottle of cement will probably add another ten cent piece and your sandpaper three cents. It should be "fine" sandpaper. Thus the cost of your entire model should be no more than about 20 cents, at the most.

If you are not familiar with balsa wood sizes, you had better bring this column with you to your local store when purchasing balsa so as to be sure to get exactly what you want.

Don't delay getting your material. Do it in time to pick up the next lesson in this column and start on your actual glider work. It won't take you more than an hour or two to construct this dandy model and if you follow directions which will be published in Lesson 6 you won't have any trouble in building it. We have put this glider through all sorts of tests and it is a better than average flier. Of course it will be small for the span of the wing is but 12 inches and the over-all length but eight inches, but you will be proud of it. Don't fail to build one.

Four Motto Winners Tired But Happy

The four winners of the Junior Birdmen motto contest returned today tired but happy from New York where they spent the week-end seeing the sights and enjoying all the thrills which the country's greatest city provides. They went to New York and back on a Gray Line bus and Colonial Navigation Company's steamer and spent two full days in the metropolis. The four winners are: Dorothy L. Connor, of South Boston; Jean Hill, of Newburyport; Albert Meryman, of Winthrop, and Jack Strain, of Revere.

Who will win the next contest in the Boston American wing of the Junior Birdmen and receive a handsome prize?

Thrills and chills will run up and down the backs of thousands of Junior Birdmen at the New England Air Festival to be given at Boston Municipal Airport on Saturday afternoon, June 9. This is the first annual field day for Junior Birdmen and a stellar program of air activity and aeronautical talks are being arranged that will be remembered for many days to come.

All Junior Birdmen are going to be on hand early for this big air pageant because 1000 red, white and blue pennants are to be given to the first 1000 boys and girls wearing Junior Birdmen wings who reach the airport at noon on that day, Saturday, June 9. The official program begins at 1 o'clock.

If you are not a Junior Birdman, join this live-wire organization immediately by filling in the coupon on this page and sending it to the Boston American Wing, Junior Birdmen. You MUST WEAR YOUR WINGS to receive one of these pennants.

The Junior Birdman whose picture is printed today is Leonard Young, 15, of 125 Parker Hill avenue, Roxbury.

CLOSE FRIEND OF O. HENRY TO BE GUEST

By N. F. T.

A unique angle attends the 8 o'clock dramatic sketch setting (WEEI) tonight, when William Griffith, editor, poet and close friend of the famous O. Henry of fiction fame, acts as guest narrator for a short story to be unfolded for the microphone.

* * *

One of the celebrated Western tales, "The Pimienta Pancakes" as written by O Henry, has been selected for adaptation on the air at the above time. Parker Fennelly and Arthur Allen, heard in the "Snow Village" rural sketches, are cast prominently in the presentation.

RECOVERY REMARKS

Edward A. Filene, the Boston department store mogul, is in Washington. Tonight at 10:45 a network of Columbia System chain stations (WNAC) carry an address by Mr. Filene, originating in the Capital and having to do with New Deal progress to date. Considered an authority on economic activity, Mr. Filene sends word the talk this evening is labeled "Are We Going Too Far?" and covers several important aspects of current recovery doings.

Helen Menken is again taking a special "Big Show" program turn to portray a Florence Nightingale role with the Erno Rapee (WNAC) orchestra.

HUB HIGHLIGHTS

Rufus P. Turner of Wellington street, in Boston, and technician for a Waltham manufacturing concern, has built the smallest radio receiving set in the world, constructed on an ordinary pin—believe or not. In that connection, the celebrated Ripley has sent for the tiny Turner model to display it at the World's Fair in Chicago. It left Boston by air mail on Saturday . . .

Dick Messner and that crack dance orchestra of his, now holding forth out Norumbega Park way, won a place in the hearts of the old folks at the Cambridge City Home yesterday. Dick directed his tune troupe through an entire afternoon entertainment over the Charles River.

A galaxy of well known stage and studio personalities likewise contributed their talents, under Boston Evening American and Sunday Advertiser, to the top notch show.

Among them was Alice O'Leary and Carl Moore, the Yankee Network favorites. Benny McLaughlin, of piano playing renown hereabouts, brought the whimsical songster, Joe Dunn, and the sweet singing Alice Blue along with him, and they outdid themselves for their elderly audience.

Ed (Yankee Philosopher) Young was there with three of his gifted juvenile artists, "Cuddles" and Billy Mitchell and little Bernardette Frankina. Al Kirby and Ruth Hanson offered a tenor and piano solo apiece. Jim Hadfield, well known local air actor, put in his appearance also, to incidentally make your radio reporter's face turn deep pink and aplenty—must bear that in mind, by the way. Elaine Woodlock and Charlotte Wenham gave appreciated acrobatic dance impressions.

Marion Mulhall, of Kate Smith bodily proportions, supplied the rare quality with which her voice is marked, upon the singing of "Roses of Picardy" as a Memorial Day reminder.

Here's how friend Hadfield up and made the writer's face red. He good naturedly insisted on some impersonations. What's more, he picked no less than Joe Penner, George Givot and Jimmy (Schnozzle) Durante for imitations. They were done, that is, after a fashion. In other words, let's not mention how.

Insull Lived Modestly as He Started Exile Abroad

Saturday's story of Insull revealed the first whispered details which reached the financial wizard of the tottering walls of the "empire" he had built. Today's disclosures show graphically the financial magnate's intense survey of the "mists ahead" as he leans over the prow of an ocean liner on his first step in the long "trek" from justice.

CHAPTER TWENTY-ONE

Once Samuel Insull had leaned intently over the prow of an ocean liner cleaving the water of New York harbor, staring eagerly into the mists ahead as he sought a glimpse of the destiny that a new land held for him.

When he reappeared in Paris, an elderly gentleman walking close to the shoulder of the bodyguard whose language was colored by the argot of Chicago's streets, he seemed to have left much of the Insull that the world had known behind him in the land he had abandoned.

He was not even Samuel Insull. He registered under a pseudonym in the fashionable hotel he had chosen on the Champs Elysees. He denied his name to all who sought to question him.

His wife and Samuel, Jr., followed him to France within a week, and from then on, Insull was willing to admit that he was Mr. Insull.

He sat on a pile of trunks as their boat docked at Cherbourg and puffed at a cigar, turning away interviewers with the comfortable assertion:

"I am no longer in the public eye. It is a great luxury to be a private individual."

He conducted his family to the Prince de Galles Hotel in Paris and took a two-room suite at $10 a day, in conformance with his idea that a modest scale of living befits a man on pension. He was sparing with his tips.

Insull was on a holiday, so he said, but he didn't seem to know quite what to do about it. He strolled around the streets with his wife and ate ices at sidewalk tables under the summer sun. By night, he might have been seen peering curiously into the wonders of Montmartre and listening to the cacophony of brassy music, so different from the rhythmic roar of trading on the stock exchange.

He received a Chicago visitor on his ninth day in Paris. It was the late Mayor Cermak, then traveling on the continent. Mr. Insull said that they compared notes on Paris, that their talk was just the chit-chat of two Chicagoans aboard.

Insull no longer made the fortunes—or misfortunes—of giant corporations. He read about them. The financial journals were his guide.

After the busy marts, all this was peace. But this, too, was exile, although only Insull at the time knew that it was. Indictments and denunciation were yet to come.

"For the first time in half a century, I am a man without a job," he said. "I have more time on my hands that I know what to do with. I sleep late—until 9 o'clock in the morning. I read a great deal and do quite a bit of walking. Quite frequently, Mrs. Insull and I go to the movies."

Thunder was low on the horizon, it was so far away. In Chicago they were beginning to examine what was left of the Insull empire and to grope for an answer to the question of why it fell. There were even those who believed that Insull should be asked for an accounting. This was mentioned to him, and, secure in his belief that people might be willing to regard him merely as the "private individual" he called himself, he said.

"I have no intention of altering my situation in any way. I cannot conceive of any such thing as being asked back to Chicago. There is absolutely no reason for it."

Auditors made accusations in the Federal Court at Chicago and State's Attorney Swanson's corps of investigators was finding out some remarkable things about Insullism as drab-looking columns of figures began to weave a story of high intrigue, astonishing in its disregard for society. Then the next President of the United States spoke his mind on Insull and his methods, and hesitating opinion suddenly KNEW what Insull was and had been.

Challenged for the insincerity of his whole life's purpose, Insull did not cringe or whimper. Not yet. But, for the first time in his life, he retired without defense from a fight.

He "did not chose," rephrasing the words of a President—a Republican President, mind you—"to be drawn into political controversy or to provide the Democratic candidate with campaign material."

He was not disposed to argue the utilities question, either with the President or the courts of the land that he knew now he must renounce, if renounce he could, for that land was not willing to renounce its claims upon him.

Those claims were made soon, for on October 4 Insull learned of his indictment in the state courts of Illinois with his brother, Martin, on charges of larceny and embezzlement. He was not invited to answer any longer, but commanded.

Plans for Reforms in Taxation Need Action

The failure of Congress to take the logical step and introduce the general manufacturers' sales tax, which has succeeded so admirably in Canada, is in a large measure the result of slushy thinking.

William James classified men into "tough minded" and "tender minded."

A group of "tender minded" folk, who seem to balk at the impact of facts, have organized themselves into the so-called "General Welfare Tax League," and carried on a steady backfire of propaganda against the sales tax idea.

In a recent bulletin, the League, opposing the sales tax because of its alleged adverse effect on consumer purchasing power, said:

> "Sixty per cent of the purchases of goods and services in the United States are made by consumers with incomes of less than $2000 per annum. The greatest decrease in buying which will result from the sales tax will be among these groups, since great numbers of these people are already spending practically every cent they make for vital necessities and have no margin left for savings. The portion of their income that goes into the payment of a sales tax will necessarily cut down their purchases by that amount . . ."

And so forth ad nauseam.

SUCH reasoning takes place in a vacuum with no effort being made to relate it statistically to the world in which we live.

It is absurd to magnify the slight bearing of the sales tax on consumer-spending power when other factors have resulted in a decline of more than fifty per cent in the national income. Among the factors making for the socially ruinous decline in income has been excessive and poorly administered taxation, especially in regard to the general property tax and the income tax.

The propaganda league gives the erroneous impression that under the existing tax set-up the great multitude of individuals go scot free of taxes.

Where taxes are paid by corporations, for example, they regard taxes as part of their overhead and undertake to absorb them in the selling prices of their merchandise.

Furthermore, irrespective of the well-intentioned views of the mistaken professors, sales taxes in Canada and in other countries have not destroyed trade.

ABSTRACTLY, it might seem that the high sales taxes on gasoline, for example, would deter persons of small means from using automobiles, but in spite of the statistical limitations of income the American people do continue to run motor cars—and registrations increase as men return to work.

It is a fraud to give the public the idea that only a relatively few rich persons now contribute to the support of the Government.

As a matter of fact, the great bulk of taxable wealth is owned through savings banks and insurance companies and through direct stock participation by millions of thrifty Americans, not by a mere handful of the fabulously wealthy.

The real issue is not who should bear the tax burden, for without a wide incidence of the tax burden among the whole of the gainfully employed it would be impossible to continue the processes of government on the present scale.

The only authentic issue is between a scientific, well coordinated tax system on the one hand and the existing punitive array of hodge-podge and destructive taxes on the other.

Men with minds tough enough to stand the granite of reality recognize that an improved and more productive tax system would inure to the general welfare.

Next November voters should turn thumbs down on Congressmen who sabotaged plans for real tax reforms.

Careful, Royalty!

A Paris dress may cause a revolution in Annam in French Indo-China.

N'Guyen Huu Hao, bride-elect of the Emperor of Annam, educated in France, comes home for the Buddhist ceremony which is to make her Empress, bringing pretty Paris frocks.

The womenfolk of the land are up in arms against her, and the men agree.

Emperor Bao Dai may have to pay dearly for his wife's Parisian trousseau—and not in money alone.

Selling the Ossipee

Familiar old jests are those about "city slickers" selling Boston Common or City Hall to "greenies." What has really just happened is the "sale" of the United States Cutter Ossipee at Portland, Me., for $110. The would-be buyer wanted a fishing vessel and evidently knew a good boat when he saw it. But he was surprised when he found the Ossipee was the property of the Federal government and not of the smooth stranger who had taken his money. Forest City police, as this is written, are looking for the dangerous racketeer who is able, it is feared, to sell the U. S. Navy piecemeal!

Vassar girls are now permitted to marry while they're at school because the college authorities think long engagements are too great an emotional strain and secret marriages are sources of unhappiness.

Maybe there's another explanation also.

Nowadays husbands are at such a premium that it's probably a good idea to let a girl get one when she can, without taking any chances.

New Use for Planes

War has been declared in tropical Africa, modern war in which giant airplanes will rain death in the form of clouds of finely powdered poison dust.

The enemy is the locust, whose swarms annually destroy nearly ten million dollars' worth of crops.

It is pleasant to know that in at least one case machines created to deal death to men are used to destroy inhuman enemies of all mankind.

Move for Court Issue -:- By James T. Williams, Jr.

Under the whip and lash of the Democratic leadership of the Senate, the committee on foreign relations will soon meet to determine whether it should report before adjournment the league court protocols, with a recommendation for their ratification.

It is generally admitted that ratification of these intricate and obscure engagements cannot be forced before adjournment. In fact, there is no intention of taking them up for serious consideration at this session, even if they should be voted out of committee.

EVIDENCE ALL IN

The only purpose of a report before adjournment would seem to be to enable the Democratic leadership of the Senate to make friendly gesture toward American membership in the League of Nations. Ratification of the league court protocols would put the United States into the league court. And as the court is the judicial organ of the league, American membership in the court would inevitably mean American entanglement with the league.

To report the court protocols to the Senate before adjournment would indicate that the committee on foreign relations was unwilling to take the time to weigh the evidence on both sides of the vital question raised by the proposal to tie up the United States with the league by American membership in the league court.

The evidence was submitted at two hearings recently held by the committee on foreign relations. At the first of these hearings, advocates of American entrance into the court presented their arguments in favor of ratification. At the second hearing, the opponents of ratification gave their testimony. These hearings have not yet been printed. Not even the members of the committee have been afforded the opportunity, as yet, to read the record of either hearing. Even after the hearings are printed, it will take the members of the committee far more time and patience than they can spare between now and adjournment "to read, mark, learn and inwardly digest" the evidence on both sides and the opposing argument.

Under these circumstances, the resolve of the Democratic leadership of the Senate to force the committee on foreign relations to vote these protocols out before adjournment can only be explained on the ground of politics, but it cannot be excused on the ground of politics.

There is an American sentiment, old-fashioned if you please, but still cherished by all sorts and conditions of true Americans. This sentiment has long found expression in the saying that among Americans "party lines end at the water's edge."

In harmony with this sentiment was the Presidential practice of earlier years of never inviting the majority members of the committee on foreign relations to a White House conference without including in the invitation representatives of the minority.

UNFAIR STAND TAKEN

Under the Constitution, no treaty can be ratified without the advice and consent of two-thirds of the senators present. This requirement attests the desire of the framers of the Constitution to discourage division over questions of foreign policy along party lines. Engagements with foreign countries involve the honor of the government and the people of the United States.

To the end that these engagements should be faithfully fulfilled, the framers of the Constitution provided for minority representation in the making of treaties by requiring a two-thirds vote for ratification.

For the Democratic leadership of the Senate to turn its back on traditional practice in this regard and strive to make a partisan issue of the league court protocols would seem to be unfair to the committee on foreign relations, unworthy of the Senate and unwise from a party point of view. Playing party politics with foreign policy is a reckless venture for either political party.

Human Side of the News -:- By Edwin C. Hill

Germany has changed violently and often in the last 15 years from Hohenzollern to the republic and finally to Hitler, but the Passion Play of Oberammergau embarks on its tercentenary very much as it has been since the Benedictine monks wrote the text in 1662.

The rest of the world rolls by this fairy village of the Bavarian Alps, stopping but once every 10 years to look in upon it while 1200 of its 2000 men, women and children re-enact the life of the Nazarene, from Gethsemane to Golgotha.

The origin of the play dates with the year 1633, when the Black Plague left its mark on almost every doorstep in Europe, save, so the legend says, Oberammergau. In thanksgiving for their deliverance, the villagers pledged themselves every 10 years to portray the story of the Passion. The pledge has been kept and in time it has brought to Oberammergau contentment and wealth.

FOUND BY WORLD

From the start, it attracted attention, first of the nearby villages, then of Germany and then of the world. Music was introduced in 1814, composed by the village schoolmaster, Richus Dedlar. The turn of the present century saw it raised to an international event through the writings and praise of journalists such as William T. Stead.. The world had discovered Oberammergau, whereupon Oberammergau in 1900 built a great theater in a natural open-air setting and with more than 5000 seats.

The village has kept its rare, medieval charm and the villagers their piety and simplicity. Peter, Caiphas, Pilate, Mary, and The Christus walk through the spotless streets in native costume, or sit at their benches with their wood carvings and pottery when they are not at the theater. The village itself is worth the journey, being, as it is, one of those elfin-like places peculiar to the highlands of Germany and to Switzerland, with the picturesque houses and their frescoed walls and window boxes.

This year the play runs from May 21 to September 16, given at intervals determined, no doubt, by the attendance and the influx of tourists. The special production in 1930, which by the way broke the 10-year chain, ran for 80 performances, a high-water mark.

The play opens at 8 o'clock in the morning and continues until 12 when there is an admission of two hours. Another four hours, from 2 until 6 elapse before it is finished. Of the 1,200 players, as many as 600 at one time are on the stage during the larger scenes. The leading roles this year are Alois Lang as Jesus, which he portrays in a virile manner, and the lovely Anni Rutz as the Virgin Mary.

By legislative decree and the approval of his excellency, the Governor of the State, perpendicular drinking will be renewed generally in New York on July 1, a fact which brings up a matter not without its interest. Indeed, repeal has been with us lo, these many months. But one misses something. Where, oh where, is "Sweet Adeline?"

Perhaps the restoration of perpendicular drinking will bring back that most famous of all vinous ballads. We await the event with the keen interest that attaches to all such social phenomena. For some 30 years, the flower of American manhood has been getting incandescent every once in a while and going out under the moon to pine for "Sweet Adeline." Whether it was just a gentle little bun, or one of those souses which rises practically to the eyeballs, it called for "Sweet Adeline." Nothing else could soothe the troubled soul. Nothing else could relieve the overburdened heart.

"Sweet Adeline, for you I pine,
In all my dreams,
Your fair face beams,
You're the flower of my heart
Sweeeeeeeeeeeeeeetttttttt
Addddd-eee-liiiiine."

WAKEFUL BALLAD

That ballad has kept more neighbors awake in the last 30 years than all the crying babies and back-fence cats. It has been warbled positively everywhere in these United States, except in the new Cathedral of St. John the Divine, the dentist chair, the bottom of the Pacific Ocean and Campbell's undertaking parlors.

During prohibition, it was sobbed in Meurice's bar, Paris headqquarters for the visiting firemen, Simpson's and Ye Olde Cheshire Cheese in London, and Alfredo's spaghetti dive in Rome. And the funniest thing about it is this old ditty which suggests a sweet, demure, old-fashioned girl with long skirts and 40 yards of fluffy petticoats under it—a girl who wouldn't say boo to a mouse—is the invariable, never-failing inspiration and solace of Sammy the Souse.

It made a mayor only a few years ago, that song. John F. Fitzgerald of Boston was elected and re-elected on a straight "Sweet Adeline" ticket, and when Boston won the World Series one year, the mayor started proceedings by throwing his silk hat in the air, and bursting into "Sweet Adeline."

Down in Baltimore, after they had nominated Woodrow Wilson and were lolling back in their chairs giving the raspberry to windjammers, who were putting Hoosis in nomination for Vice-President, it was "Honey" Fits of Boston who quieted the tumult by leaping to the platform, hurdling the chairman and leading 16,000 more or less deserving Democrats in the barber shop ballad that's much better known than "The Star Spangled Banner."

Marry-Go-Round

By Helen Rowland

The first sign that a man has found a new heart-interest is his impatience with the old one, who happens to be in the way.

The more a man thinks of love and women the more he imagines he has reduced his vast ignorance of feminine psychology to a science.

Helen Rowland

A woman always keeps a warm corner in her heart for every man she has once thought she loved; but to a man, nothing is so completely refrigerated, beyond the point of de-frosting, as day before yesterday's heart-throbs.

When an attractive man begins to near fifty, he should put wax in his ears, insulate his vanity and padlock his heart. That is the Age of Indiscretion —and, married or single, he is easy plucking.

Marriage is becoming such an uncertain affair that a bride sometimes wonders whether or not to unpack her hope chest until she finds out whether it is going to be a continuous engagement or merely a try-out.

Modernistic ideas about love, marriage and domesticity may broaden a girl's mind and stimulate her thinking powers, but they are pretty sure to ruin her talent for keeping the buttons on a man's clothes.

The Real America

By Bainbridge Colby

Former Secretary of State.

Excerpts From an Address Delivered Before the Economic Club in New York City.

THE "great issues of the contemporary world," as we hear the problems of the hour described, are probably neither so great nor so unexampled as, for instance, Mr. Tugwell and Mr. Richberg think them.

The talk of revolution, and even the use of the word, seems confined to the members of the Brain Trust.

With the exception of the rostrum in Union Square, where there is no closed season for Communists and other advocates of violence and class upheaval, the talk of revolution seems to extend no further than the intimate intellectual circle which has gained the attention—to what genuine extent, I cannot say—of the President.

The great mass of Americans have little interest and less patience for such talk. They know they are passing through a storm. They are confident they can weather it.

WE should not allow ourselves to forget that when Mr. Roosevelt took office, the country was weighed down by the cumulative effects of many policies and practices now seen to have been tragically mistaken.

He has done many things that had to be done and were difficult to do.

The present Administration has now held office for nearly a third of its elected term. If it is too early to pass judgment, it is not too soon to indulge in opinion, and opinion is not necessarily hostile because it is discriminating. Criticism is one of truth's implements.

From day to day we are told that the regimentation of American life is steadily proceeding. We are sternly admonished that "America must choose"—choose between our inherited and deeply ingrained faith in freedom and individual liberty, endeared to us by time and the triumphs we have won under their banners, and this un-American alternative called "regimentation," or as it is sometimes described, "planned direction" of all our actions to which the new control can be applied.

AS a Democrat, I propose to take the time necessary to get my bearings.

Belonging to a party which, throughout our history, has jealously resisted every undue extension of governmental function at the expense of the individual's liberty, I feel entitled to ascertain what has happened to my party, that its present leaders should be so intent upon crushing every sentiment and garroting every principle, regarded heretofore as characterizing the Democratic party.

I recall a remark President Wilson made to me one day during the height of the war. Said he:

In fact, the hope of the country, its fate and ultimate happiness, may depend on the capacity of the present generation of Americans for bold and searching criticism.

CONSIDER for a moment what has taken place in a little over a twelvemonth.

The Federal Government has been empowered:

To control the production and distribution of all agricultural products.

To control the production and distribution of substantially all other articles moving in commerce.

To regulate the business of banking to the exclusion of the States.

To regulate and control the issuance, distribution and sale of all securities.

To fix the civil rights and liabilities of persons engaged in the sale of all articles moving in inter-state commerce or whose sale is solicited by means of inter-state communication or through the mails.

A vast bureaucracy has been called into being and fastened upon us without our realizing it, much less authorizing it.

Almost overnight it has been brought to pass.

Gradually it has dawned upon the country, and it is now quite plain, that recovery was only partially the aim of the Administration. A great part of its interest has been in radical institutional overturn and the new-modelling of the State.

Thus measures, which were to meet an emergency, we are now told are to be permanent.

Other measures, which were to promote recovery but have had quite the opposite result, are now justified as reforms, regardless of their consequences.

The guarantees of the Constitution are dismissed lightly as if they were irrelevances in the present day life of America. The basic principles of the Constitution, we are told, must be somehow got around.

In our long history there have been recurring periods when our institutions have seemed to be in peril. There have been periods of great anxiety for the Constitution, periods when the people have been apprehensive as to what the courts might do.

But if one will review the history of past crises it will be seen how splendidly the Constitution has met each one, and how faithfully our highest court has discharged its duty as the Constitution's guardian as well as its interpreter.

It is the most American thing about America. Darkness shall not envelop it.

THERE is another ground for assurance in these unsettled times.

You may have noted that the President, very wisely it seems to me, has avoided personal commitment on any matter of theory or apparent constitutional departure.

It will therefore not be difficult for him, as the inevitable failure of some of the experiments of his administration are revealed, to abandon them.

He is morally free to pass judgment on the extent to which any experiment or innovation, which has been attempted, is incompatible with the habits of thought, the racial instincts and the governmental traditions of the American people.

In addition, we have preserved unimpaired the right of free speech, the right of a free press and the complete freedom of amendment, rescission and repeal in our representative body.

So long as this power of self-correction is at our command, we may err and stray from the true spirit of our institutions, but we have not lost the way back.

By Rev. J. Stanley Light, St. Andrew's Episcopal Silent Mission.
